B.C.'s road deaths soaring

MASSED MASTS fill Inner Harbor on eve of annual Swiftsure classic. Visitor Louise Powell from Norfolk, Va., dropped by to snap the yachts and was in turn, snapped by the Times' Bill Halkett. Big race gets under way tomorrow morning with first boats expected back some time Sunday afternoon.

Speed limit 'frustration'

By PAUL NICHOLSON
Times Staff

The general decline in automobile-related injuries and deaths that followed implementation of B.C.'s mandatory seatbelt legislation 18 months ago has undergone a dramatic reversal.

In the first quarter of 1979, virtually every category of motor vehicle accident monitored by the government has increased by double-figure percentages over the same period the year before.

Highway fatalities are up 20 per cent, while the number of injured has climbed 29 per cent.

The number of accidents is up 14 per cent and the number of vehicles involved has increased 12 per cent over the first quarter of 1978.

Motor Vehicles Superintendent R.G. Whitlock said today one reason for the increases is the fact that B.C. had a good year in 1978, so the percentage figures this year look bad in comparison.

"But I also believe an increase in the speed on the highways has led to more accidents and more severe injuries, especially with more smaller cars on the highways," Whitlock said.

Many motorists are frustrated with the basic 80 km/h speed limit throughout the province and habitually exceed it, he said.

This creates a dangerous situation on the highways where drivers obeying the limit are being passed by those constantly exceeding the limit.

And there is a tendency for drivers who are regularly being passed to speed up themselves.

When a driver is going faster than he intended, it decreases his chances of avoiding or pulling out of a potential accident, he said.

The increasing number of accidents and injuries is a trend all across North America, Whitlock said.

Gold price tops $270

Times News Services

Gold prices soared to record levels today, topping $270 an ounce ($310.50 Canadian) on the bullion markets in London and Zurich.

Bullion prices in London rocketed to $270.15 U.S. an ounce, up from Thursday's closing price of $265.00. and shattering the previous record of $265.625 set Tuesday. London gold brokers fixed the morning price at $270.00 an ounce, a record for any fixing.

The widely forecast $300-an-ounce (U.S.) price of gold, predicted for the end of this year, now appears increasingly realistic.

Investors traditionally buy gold as a hedge in times of economic unrest.

Meanwhile, sparked by the sharpest gasoline price hike since the Arab oil embargo, Americans got another inflationary jolt when the consumer price index jumped 1.1 per cent in April, the U.S. government reported today.

The overall rise surpassed March's 1 per cent increase and was just slightly below February's 1.2 per cent gain. During the first four months of the year, consumer prices rose at a annual rate of 13.2 per cent.

They have jumped 14.4 per cent during the first four months of 1979.

Free Quebec: 500,000 jobs lost

By PETER HADEKEL
Times Quebec Bureau

QUEBEC — A Quebec government study released Thursday admits more than 500,000 jobs would be lost in an independent Quebec if commercial relations with the rest of Canada were broken off.

The study states what most Parti Quebecois politicians have been unwilling to admit: Quebec is far more dependent on the rest of Canada for export markets and jobs than Canada is on Quebec.

In the case of an economic rupture between Quebec and Canada, unemployment in Quebec would almost triple, says the study tabled by Intergovernmental Affairs Minister Claude Morin.

It is the last in a series of reports on federalism commissioned by Morin to prepare the PQ government for its referendum campaign on sovereignty association.

The study says Quebec's weak, tariff-protected manufacturing industries like furniture, textiles, clothing and shoes would suffer more from commercial rupture than would Ontario's industries. It adds that Quebec sends 30 per cent of its exports to Ontario while Ontario sends only 10 per cent of its exports to Quebec.

In the event of a trade rupture, commercial activity in Quebec would drop by 48 per cent in Quebec compared to 24 per cent in Ontario and 6.2 per cent in the other provinces.

The furniture industry in Quebec would shrink by 57 per cent, compared to 21.8 per cent in Ontario and 10.5 per cent in the rest of Canada.

Total employment in Quebec would drop 28.4 per cent (about 500,000 jobs) while the job loss in Ontario would be 15 per cent or about 400,000 jobs.

The scenario assumes that Quebec and Canada both adopt protective tariffs for their own industries.

But if Quebec and Canada were to work out a limited free trade agreement under which Quebec exports like clothing, paper, primary metals and shoes could enter Canada duty free, while rubbers, pastics, heavy equipment and machine parts from Canada would have free entry into Quebec, Canada would be a loser in the deal, the study says.

Such a form of economic association would provide Quebec with about $1.2 billion in economic advantages while the estimated benefit for the other provinces would be $566 million. In any eventual negotiations between a sovereign Quebec and Canada, the choice of sectors to be covered in a free trade agreement will be "very important", says the study.

Charlottes' MDs resign

QUEEN CHARLOTTE CITY (CP) — Five doctors employed by the B.C. government to work on the Queen Charlotte Islands have tendered their resignations, effective July 1, after claiming they have not been paid for overtime work.

Under new government policies introduced this year, doctors hired by the health and human resources ministries to work in isolated areas are paid a straight salary.

They are expected to bargain for overtime through the B.C. Medical Association but the doctors here say they are not satisfied with the results.

Residents of the islands complained to Health Minister Bob McClelland who said the doctors will get their overtime pay, pending the outcome of negotiations with the association. However, the disgruntled doctors said this is no guarantee.

Three of the doctors are based here, while the other two work out of Masset. There are only two other doctors on the islands, and both work at the Canadian Forces base at Masset.

Diane MacKenzie, spokesman for the health and human resources ministries, said the doctors are caught in a difficult situation.

She said if the government policies are not changed, the area might wind up with no doctors or doctors with little experience.

Florida executes murderer

Times News Services

RAIFORD, Fla. — Convicted killer John Spenkelink was put to death today in Florida's electric chair, the first person to be executed in the United States since Gary Gilmore went before a firing squad in Utah in 1977.

Spenkelink lost his last hope of reprieve four minutes before the scheduled execution when the Supreme Court voted 6 to 2 to deny a stay.

The execution lasted about two minutes.

Huge Raiford State Prison fell silent when the switch was thrown, but across from the prison in a cow pasture about 100 demonstrators shrieked themselves into a frenzy.

5 days to safety after plane crash

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — Two Canadians, exhausted but suffering only minor injuries after a light airplane crash three weeks ago, trudged to safety Thursday night after wandering for five days in the rugged Central Idaho mountains, Custer County authorities said.

Brent Dyer and Donna Johnson, both of Estevan, Sask., told deputies they stayed with their plane 15 days before they went for help.

Pilot Norm Pischke, apparently set out for help earlier and was still missing.

Custer County Deputy Sheriff Sandra James said the wreckage of the plane was spotted by a National Guard helicopter this morning. An evacuation team was being taken to the site by helicopter.

The survivors said Ms. Johnson's father, Donald Johnson, was mortally injured in the crash and died several days after, Sheriff Sid Teuscher said. He said the body was still at the wreckage.

The Canadians stumbled to safety at the abandoned Livingston mine, 73 kilometres southwest of Challis, Idaho, and were met by mine employee Elmer Swanson, who notified authorities.

They were taken to the North Custer Medical Clinic in Challis where they were treated by Dr. Richard Maxwell and released.

The sheriff said Dyer and Ms. Johnson suffered minor cuts and bruises and the woman's toes had been frostbitten. Both were suffering from starvation.

The survivors told authorities they stayed with the downed plane for about 15 days before deciding to walk out. He said they burned gasoline from the Cessna 172 Skyhawk in an effort to ward off cold temperatures and snow, which had almost covered the aircraft.

Last weekend, the two survivors apparently decided no one was going to come looking for them and decided to try to make it out of the backcountry.

"They figured no one was going to spot them, so they walked out," the sheriff said. "All they know is they walked around for five days and we don't know if they were walking in circle or what. So we don't know where the plane is. I sent a plane up tonight, but it was dark before we could do anything."

Details of the crash were sketchy, but Dyer and Ms. Johnson told the sheriff that clouds from a spring snow storm hampered visibility forcing Pischke to set the plane down.

"From what we could tell, they couldn't get over the mountains, so the pilot apparently tried to get out of the storm by traveling low in the canyons," Teuscher said. "The plane's wing caught a tree, and then it crashed."

By eating moss after they ran out of a few snacks, such as peanuts and candy, they were able to stay alive and in reasonably good condition, Teuscher said.

The two seemed to be in good spirits, the sheriff said, and were excited about calling their families in Saskatchewan.

"They were happy to be back with people," Teuscher said. "Dyer mentioned several times he wanted a hot fudge sundae, and they were enjoying coffee.

"They had some sunflower seeds and a few other things to eat. But Dyer said they ate anything they could find. He said they were eating moss out of the bottom of streams."

Who's who on Tory 'hit list'

Times News Services

OTTAWA — A pessimistic crew of about 150 aides to Liberal cabinet ministers are today scrambling for jobs.

The pickings are made even slimmer by recent cutbacks in the public service and the new Clark government's avowed plan to eliminate another 60,000 jobs through attrition over three years.

Even those who qualify for special preference for public service jobs, by virtue of serving three consecutive years on a minister's exempt staff, are uncertain whether they will get jobs.

The rumor is that they are on one of three priority lists, with the top-ranking list the one carrying names of public servants made redundant by recent public service cutbacks.

And because of high turnover among executive assistants and special assistants to ministers, many don't even qualify to be placed on a list.

Because the ministerial aides work as politically exempt staff, not public service employees, their jobs can be as uncertain as the tenure of the particular cabinet minister for whom they work.

A few may be accepted into Conservative ranks, however, as the incoming minority government seeks ministerial aides for a cabinet that conceivably could have a lifespan of no more than six months or a year.

"Nobody I know has been through a government change," said one source. "We don't know exactly what to expect."

The last change was in 1963 when Lester Pearson's Liberals replaced John Diefenbaker's Conservatives.

It would, though, be ludicrous for incoming prime minister Joe Clark to fire deputy ministers and heads of government agencies right now, according to political scientist George Szablowski who has spent more than two years studying the most powerful mandarins in the federal government.

"These are the people on whom the new government must depend more than anyone else for an orderly transition," Szablowski said.

"If anybody is suggesting that heads will roll before he (Clark) meets Parliament in September or October, I just don't buy it," Szablowski said.

Published reports, seemingly based more on fear than fact, however, keep claiming the Conservatives have a so-called "hit list" of

Time to butt out tobacco industry: UN body

KITCHENER, Ont. (CP) — Tobacco advertising should be banned and tobacco growing and manufacturing industries should be progressively reduced in size as quickly as possible, says a report released today by the World Health Organization, an agency of the United Nations.

Released in Canada at a University of Waterloo news conference, the report said non-smoking should be regarded as normal social behavior "and that all action which can promote the development of this attitude be taken."

The report, called "Controlling the Smoking Epidemic," said: "The international tobacco industry's irresponsible behavior and its massive advertising and promotional campaign are . . . direct causes of a substantial number of unnecessary deaths."

The health organization committee that prepared the report said no worth-while progress can be made in reducing smoking unless governments put public health ahead of the interests of the tobacco business.

Among the recommendations of the report are:

— Discourage the promotion of tobacco exports.

— Stop smokers from working in the asbestos industry and in uranium mining or in other industries which are of particularly high risk to them and prohibit smoking by law wherever asbestos exposure might occur.

— Monitor carefully as well as research the combined effects of smoking and occupations where toxic inhalation is a problem.

— Use annual tax increases of not more than 20 per cent as a deterrent to smokers and levy higher taxes against cigarettes with higher tar and nicotine levels.

The report was released by William Forbes, dean of mathematics at the University of Waterloo and a member of the health organization committee that wrote the report, and by Robert Wake, a professor at Carleton University in Ottawa.

Forbes said: "The aim would be in 25 years time we would have a smoke-free society."

Israel leaves Sinai town

EL ARISH, Occupied Sinai (AP) — The Egyptian flag went up and Israel's Star of David banner came down in a brief military ceremony today amid scenes of joyous confusion in this Sinai town, marking the first transfer of territory under the U.S. sponsored Middle East peace treaty.

The final contingent of Israeli troops, which had occupied the town since the 1967 war, pulled out and Egyptian forces took over in the El Arish sector on the Mediterranean coast in the first stage of the Israeli withdrawal from occupied territory.

There was an explosion of joy by the town's 45,000 Arab residents who mingled with hundreds of Egyptians, shaking hands, shouting congratulations and kissing.

The ceremony coincides with the opening of talks between the two countries in Beersheba, the Israeli Negev Desert capital 95 kilometres to the northeast, on self-rule for Palestinians in the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip.

"This is an very moving moment," said Egyptain President Anwar Sadat, who watched the transfer ceremony on television at his home in Alexandria.

However, there was one ugly moment in the transfer ceremony when an angry crowd swarmed after a group of Israeli soldiers who were delayed in their withdrawal.

Egyptian troops moved in and calmed the crowd after the Arabs scuffled briefly with the helmeted Israel soldiers.

"The handing over of El Arish today is he clearest and most sincere expression of our desire for peace," said Maj.-Gen. Dan Shomron, chief of Israel's Southern Command, who represented Israel at the 25-minute military ceremony.

"We return after 12 years of bitter struggle, including the glorious war of October," said Gen. Abdul Hamed Hamdi, the Egyptian representative. "Our forces, who know the meaning of war, also know the meaning of peace."

Meanwhile, Lebanon accused Israel Thurday night of "very serious acts of aggression" involving air, naval and artillery attacks into South Lebanon which it said killed a number of civilians this week and still are continuing.

Bordeaux fetches $28,000

CHICAGO (AP) — An 1806 bottle of Chateau Lafite-Rothschild was sold for a record $28,000 Thursday to a Syracuse, N.Y., liquor store owner at an auction of rare wines. The sale price exceeded experts' predictions by nearly $10,000.

The top bidder was Charles Mara, 31, who said he came to the Heublein Premiere National Wine Auction confident that he would take the famed Lafite home.

Bidding on the Bordeaux, believed to be one of the last two 1806 bottles in existence, reached a frenetic pace within minutes after the opening bid was struck at $8,000.

A flurry of bid cards fluttered through the crowd of nearly 600 as the price climbed toward $15,000, erasing the previous world record price of $14,200 for a similar 24-ounce bottle set in 1976.

It appeared as though $16,000 was the signal for the more timid to bow out, leaving only two men to duel for possession of the vintage Bordeaux, a bottle akin to that said to have been appreciated by Thomas Jefferson.

Pair held after slaying of U.S. customs agent

EVERSON, Wash. (AP) — Authorities today captured a man and a woman in the shooting death of U.S. customs agent Kenneth Ward, who was gunned down as he spoke with a motorist Thursday night.

The woman was captured about 2 a.m. near the Nooksack River, south of the border crossing at Aldergrove, after she and the man fled the scene of the shooting, said Ned Winsor, U.S. customs service assistant director in Seattle.

She was identified by a Whatcom County department of emergency services official as Marie Ferrelvoeus, 26, of California.

The man, who was not immediately identified, was captured after sunrise by a combined team of local, county, federal and Canadian officers. A gun was found in his possession, police said.

Ward, 34, was killed by three or four shots from a .45-calibre pistol as he questioned the man inside the American border station south of Aldergrove, Port Director John Hillestad said.

The woman, questioned after she was caught, gave police no explanation for the cause of the shooting.

Mount said shoes and socks believed to be the man's were found shortly before the woman was caught. He said he didn't think the man swam the river, which is snow-cold and swiftly flowing.

The man and woman fled the scene in a car with California licence plates after firing two other shots as they left, Mount said.

He said the car was followed to Everson, about 12 kilometres south of the U.S.-Canada border, by an off-duty customs agent. The car became stuck on a mound of dirt at Everson, where two people were seen fleeing and their footprints led to the water of the Nooksack River, Mount said.

Law enforcement officers set up a search perimeter five kilometres in diameter with roadblocks south of Everson, and police used infra-red scopes and four dogs to search in thick brush and forest in the area, he said.

Mount co-ordinated the search by sheriff's deputies, Customs and Immigration officers, and police from the Washington communities of Bellingham, Everson Lynden, Sumas and Blain.

Nixon sells San Clemente

La Casa Pacifica, the estate at San Clemente, Calif., which Richard Nixon once promised to leave to the American people, has been sold. The former president bought the 5.9-acre oceanfront estate with its sprawling Spanish-style villa in 1969 for $340,000. What he sold it for may never be known — or may be revealed when the formal announcement of the sale is expected. Jack Brennan, Nixon's top aide, confirmed the sale in a telephone interview Thursday. Nixon and his wife Pat visited La Casa Pacifica frequently during his presidency, and have lived in it since he resigned on Aug. 9, 1974, under threat of impeachment. They plan to move into a $650,000 waterfront home with six baths in nearby exclusive Cyprus Shores. That house was bought by Charles G. (Bebe) Rebozo of Key Biscayne, Fla., Nixon's closest friend and confidante, and is one of 50 in a private guarded compound.

An arrest warrant was issued in Toronto Thursday for Penthouse magazine publisher Bob Guccione on a charge of distributing obscene material. The warrant was sworn over a special edition last year of the magazine, called Penthouse Loving Couples, which contained pictures depicting numerous sex acts, police said. The warrant says Guccione is to appear in provincial court in Brampton, Ont., Sept. 7. But officials will have no recourse if he decides not to show up — obscenity charges are not extraditable.

Multi-millionaire Cullen Davis married his girlfriend Karen Master in Fort Worth, Texas, on Thursday — just one hour after the expiration of the 30-day waiting period in his stormy divorce. A small group of only 25 friends and family members attended the wedding at the home of Davis's long-time friend, Donald Hudgins. The couple is passing up a wedding trip to begin moving immediately into the $6-million Davis mansion. Davis still faces three felony charges in an August 1976 shooting at the mansion that left two persons dead and two wounded, including his former wife Priscilla Childers Davis.

Has Dame Margot Fonteyn, the celebrated prima ballerina, said goodbye to the London stage at the age of 60? That report surfaced following her performance Wednesday night at London's Royal Opera House in Covent Garden. However, her secretary said Thursday: "Dame Margot has said nothing about this being her last performance." Sydney Edwards, arts correspondent of London's Evening Standard, reported Thursday: "I would suspect she meant this 60th birthday gala to be her London goodbye. Certainly everyone in the audience behaved as though it was." Dame Margot has often said that she would never formally announce her retirement, just quietly slip away when the applause died down.

In another three days, Peter Snyman hopes to lift a champagne toast to a new entry in the Guinness Book of Records — 50 days and six hours in a den of deadly snakes in Hartesbeeport, South Africa. But already another South African has come forward to challenge Snyman's feat. He is Chris Otto, 45 from eastern Natal province. All he needs, he says, is a sponsor. "People are making too big a fuss over Snyman's achievement," Otto said. "I have no fear whatsoever of snakes and I see no problem in being in their company for a long period."

Portugal's Ribatejo cattle district came alive with displays of horsemanship and dancing skills when Britain's Princess Anne arrived. Anne and her husband, Capt. Mark Phillips, watched from a peasant's cottage Thursday as dancers dressed in traditional costumes kicked up the dust outside. They fed off typical Ribatejo fare — eels and pork roasted by open fires.

And, finally, Joey Travolta, younger brother of actor John Travolta, has fired his agent because she failed to get his acting career off the ground, papers filed with the state Supreme Court in New York show. The agent, Yvette Bikoff, filed suit Thursday demanding that Travolta keep her as his personal manager or compensate her with $200,000. Travolta severed the contract March 11. The agent contends the contract is still in effect, but Travolta says she did not help him earn $10,000 in the first year of the contract, as promised.

Spanish army officers killed

MADRID (AP) — Two terrorists assassinated a retired general, two colonels and their chauffeur in a submachine-gun and hand grenade attack in the Spanish capital today, police said.

It was the bloodiest terrorist attack yet against army officers.

Witnesses said the terrorists struck at 7 a.m. when the car was moving slowly after picking up the general at his home in downtown Madrid.

They said two young men in blue overalls who were standing by the road first riddled the car with more than 50 rounds of sub-machine-gun fire. When the vehicle came to a halt, one of them opened a door of the car and tossed in a hand grenade.

The three army officers were killed instantly and the driver died shortly after being admitted to a hospital, police said.

The victims were identified as Lt.-Gen. Luis Gomez Hortiguela, 69; his aide, Col. Agustin Laso, Col. Juan Avalos Gomariz, a secretary of the general, and the driver of their official car, Luis Gomez Borrego.

Quake blocks roads

BELGRADE (UPI) — Strong aftershocks jolted the Montenegrin coastal area of southern Yugoslavia today following a major quake Thursday evening that caused injuries and damaged buildings already wrecked in a catastrophic quake April 15.

Thursday's quake injured 65 people, some of them seriously, damaged the buildings, cut off water and power supplies and blocked roads in a 93-mile-long southern Adriatic resort area from Dubrovnik to Ulcinj, close to the Albanian border.

It struck at 6:23 p.m. (11:23 a.m. PDT) Thursday and measured 5.6 on the open-ended Richter scale, seismologists said. About 40 tremors, some of them measuring 3 to 4 on the Richter scale, rocked the area in the next 15 hours.

A number of buildings in the Montenegrin towns of Ulcinj, Bar, Budva, Tivat, Kotor and Hercegnovi collapsed and most of residents spent the night in the open following the Thursday quake which was the strongest in a series of more than 1,000 aftershocks after the April quake.

Belgrade seismologists said the quake was an aftershock of the April quake and was the result of ground stabilization in the area.

Freedom crash

HAVANA (Reuter) — Under a burst of police bullets, seven Cubans Thursday smashed a truck through a wall surrounding the Venezuelan ambassador's house in a bid for political asylum.

Six persons were injured, three by bullets and three by the crash, Cuban officials said. At least two of the fleeing Cubans were arrested.

It was the second violent bid for asylum at the Venezuelan ambassador's official residence within two weeks. A group of 12 Cubans burst past police guards in a small bus May 12. They are still in the house as the Cuban and Venezuelan governments negotiate their future.

The identity of those involved in the latest attempt and the severity of their injuries was not known.

Permanent third party?

Nearly everyone had something to be happy about on election night. Conservatives celebrated because they would form a government, the first Tory administration in two decades. Liberals were not exuberant, but opposition leader-elect Pierre Trudeau might have been mistaken for the winner Tuesday night with his "be of good cheer" concession speech. Some Liberals probably look forward to a period of time on the other side of the Commons, to regroup and perhaps rechart their direction as a national force.

The Creditistes elected a bare half dozen MPs in Quebec, where once they had more than four times that number. But for a party which has had more leaders in two years than all the other parties together in a decade, and which chose a new chieftain only weeks before the election was called, it was a reasonable performance.

With the Creditistes' ideological bent and by the luck of the numbers, their half dozen seats can represent a balance of power.

The New Democratic Party increased the number of seats by 50 per cent and its share of the popular vote by nearly three percentage points.

By any ordinary measure, the party should be happy. Instead, it's glum.

NDP leader Ed Broadbent, making a very late statement on election night, did not hide his bitterness. Clearly he had expected a much better showing by the NDP.

One reason for the NDP's disappointment is the lopsided way votes translate into seats in the Commons. With two million votes, the NDP took 26 seats. The Tories received twice as many votes but five times as many seats, 136. The Liberals received even more votes than the Conservatives, but ended the night with 114 seats.

Elections under the parliamentary system produce an imperfect form of representative government, but few Canadians seem to want a European-style system of proportional representation which encourages splinter groups and coalitions of disparate factions which have to be patched together to run the country.

In any case, NDP has done as well in past elections and hasn't been disheartened.

This time it was different. Organized labor made a massive, well-publicized effort on behalf of NDP candidates. The Canadian Labor Congress put its credibility on the line by promising to throw its full support behind the party. For the first time too, the NDP had a substantial war chest (paid for by the public under the Election Expenses Act), which it used for a splashy radio and television campaign. It hired a U.S. adman to produce some slick commercials. The party could afford to rent a private campaign jet this time and the press paid attention to what party leader Ed Broadbent said and did.

But all this effort brought no more seats than the party earned on its own in 1972.

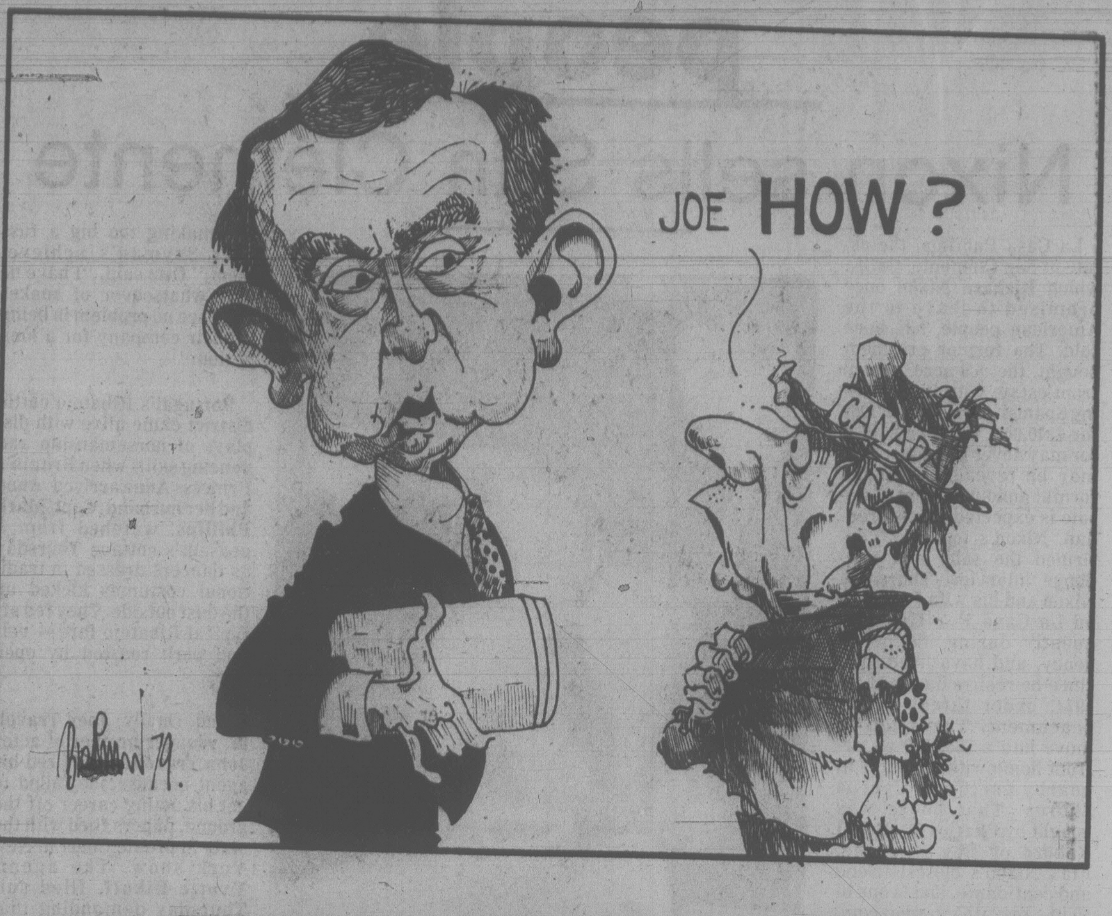
Broadbent's bitterness stems mainly from the party's poor performance in Ontario, his home province and the industrial heartland of the nation. Where the party's highest expectations rode, it dropped one seat. So much for the clout of organized labor.

Election arithmetic denied the New Democrats the sole balance of power they so obviously hoped for. Joe Clark used with telling effect the slogan "A vote for the NDP is a vote for the Liberals." It was a distortion, but the NDP's support of the 1972-74 Liberal minority government suggested to voters that the only way of putting Trudeau out for good was to vote Tory.

The outcome leaves the NDP's future in doubt. It is still a healthy political force, controlling the government of Saskatchewan and the official opposition in two other western provinces. It can point to many of its policies and programs adopted by Ottawa governments through they years.

But the party faces a time of doubt and indecision. With Broadbent, a political science professor from the moderate wing of the party, the NDP went into its first election with someone who had no roots in the harsh Depression era which molded Tommy Douglas and David Lewis and other party leaders. Broadbent said nary a word about the "poor" or "downtrodden" this time. The party wanted to exercise power, either directly or as a partner in a coalition and trimmed its ideological sails accordingly. The election results were a rude awakening.

The question party members may have to ask themselves is whether the NDP is doomed to permanent third party status, however honorable its reputation as the "conscience of the Commons," only infrequently called on to support a minority government, never commanding enough national support to govern the country.



CLAUDE ADAMS

In U.S., it's still Joe Who?

WASHINGTON — Joe Clark's new Tory government inherits a comfortable and generally unspotted relationship between Ottawa and Washington at a time when Americans are taking a much closer look at their northern neighbor.

Apart from a handful of irritants that have been around for years, such as the flap over border broadcasting and the convention tax problem, Clark shouldn't have any big Canada-U.S. concerns pressing on him in his early months in office.

The easy relationship between the two countries is in large part a legacy of the final two years of the Liberal government. Prime Minister Trudeau, seen here as a bright and thoughtful internationalist, got along well with President Jimmy Carter.

This was reflected in the success of negotiations leading to the U.S.-Canada oil pipeline deal in the west, and the settlement of the fisheries boundary dispute off the east coast. In both instances, Canada struck a good bargain.

Tax law problems

Canada remains unhappy about U.S. tax laws which have cut into its big city convention business and there is concern about how a "Buy American" trend here will affect the trading relationship between the two countries, who exchange $60 billion worth of goods every year.

However, these are viewed as issues involving an intransigent U.S. congress and unlikely to sour the prevailing mood of co-operation.

If Clark has any problems with the U.S., they would likely stem from his image here. Trudeau got consistently good reviews in the American press, largely for his energetic and eloquent opposition to Quebec's Premier Levesque.

In a decade of repeated political turnovers in western democracies, Trudeau was seen here as the most artful political survivor of his generation.

Joe Clark, on the other hand, inspires some doubt. Sen. Daniel Moynihan of New York, one of the sharpest and most outspoken Democrats on Capitol Hill, expressed the extreme U.S. view in a Plattsburgh, N.Y. speech last weekend.

Canada, Moynihan told a university commencement ceremony, "seems destined to lacklustre leadership by a meek national government led by a small town politician with no national experience."

Though he later offered a semi-apology and said he was only trying to liven up a heavy affair with a bit of satire, Moynihan was voicing a segment of U.S. public opinion.

The question of Canadian unity fascinates people here. The critical American problems, by contrast, are somehow dull and impenetrable. Inflation, energy and Carter's battles with congress may be matters of great importance, but they lack political and social drama.

Inject a pair of high profile personalities like Trudeau and Levesque, and this fight over national existence at the U.S. doorstep takes on an added dimension.

More and more congressmen appear ready to speak out on Canadian affairs these days. Sen. Charles Percy of Illinois, for example, was recently prevailed upon by business lobbyists to criticize the Quebec government's intentions to nationalize a part of the asbestos industry.

JIMMY CARTER
. . . he was Jimmy Who? too

Another factor drawing the countries together is the American view of the Canadian election result as part of worldwide trend towards the right.

"You could make a good case for it — France, Israel, Sweden, Spain, Great Britain and now Canada," political analyst Ben Wattenberg commented this week. "They seem to be saying something about inflation and social welfare, working new approaches. The same tide is running here in the United States."

On a more superficial level, Joe Clark and Jimmy Carter are seen to have a number of common characteristics. They are both serious, industrious and low-key leaders. Both at one time or another were tagged with the surname "Who?"

Neither has any real charisma, and their respective backgrounds are rather grey and flat. When they ascended to leadership, neither could boast any national experience.

Americans have never forgiven Carter his blandness and lack of style. In the same way, Joe Clark is not likely to stir much emotion here.

Nevertheless, the state of Canada-U.S. relations is stable enough to withstand a period of leadership short of imagination and dynamism. Some of the key sectors:

☐ Energy. Two months before his defeat, Trudeau secured a pledge from President Carter to remedy U.S. delays in clearing the way for the building of the $14 billion Alaska gas pipeline. This process is now under way.

Helping farmers

☐ Trade. Few problems here, with the possible exception of the Autopact, a free trade agreement which in recent years has resulted in an imbalance for Canada. In the context of the just-completed global trade agreement, which seeks to further reduce trade barriers between countries, prospects for an increase in Canada-U.S. trade seem good.

☐ Environment. The Garrison water diversion project in North Dakota, once seen as a serious threat to Canadian waterways, has been drastically modified by the Carter administration, and has been put on hold while negotiations continue.

☐ Wheat. Recently, Canada and the U.S., the world's biggest wheat exporters, pledged to co-operate more closely in pricing the commodity to prevent the kind of cutthroat competitiveness that could injure farmers in both countries.

☐ Communications. Although the border broadcasting dispute has not been settled, and congressmen have been making angry noises for months, the affair has been well-contained by the administration here. The dispute centres on Canadian tax measures that discourage businesses from buying advertising on U.S. television stations that beam back across the border.

It is the recognized practice in schools of our type to send to the parents a detailed report on the progress of every boy at the end of each school term. A great deal of trouble is taken by the members of staff to compile these reports and they are regarded by the parents as having a special value in informing them about their sons. The report is something which they would naturally wish to discuss fully with their boys before they return to school for the following term.

We do our best to mail these reports as soon as we can after the end of a term, and at the end of our spring term session in March we were able to send out these reports on 250 boys within a week of the end of term. They were posted by first class mail on the morning of March 26. I received numerous complaints from parents that the reports had not been received by the time the boys returned to school 10 days later. One report to Duncan took 10 days (a rate of travel of one mile per day is not impressive) and the average time for delivery in North and West Vancouver was approximately two weeks.

My first response on receiving these understandable complaints was to ask my local postmaster for some information. He assured me, with the ready assistance which he always offers us, that the mails were sent out properly on the day in question. His advice then was to refer my complaint to the district director of postal services in Vancouver. I wrote to this person on April 9 and have so far, over five weeks later, not yet received a reply.

My conclusions can only be that either the district director receives so many complaints of this nature that he cannot possibly reply to them all, or that it has not occurred to him that it is courteous to reply to a reasonable complaint, or that most likely the letter has not yet been delivered. — Darrell J. Farrant, Headmaster Shawnigan Lake School.

Clean campaign

The Victoria branch of the Association of Women Electors (AWE) would like to congratulate the Victoria candidates in the recent provincial elections on the responsible and courteous way in which they carried on their campaign.

Unfortunately there had to be losers as well as winners.

Next morning in a local corner grocery, where you often get old-time, cracker-barrel wisdom, one customer expressed the general opinion very neatly. Said she, "We just had too many good people running in Victoria."

So far there has been no report on the percentage of voter turn-out but from our observation it was unusually good. This is very gratifying to the AWE, one of whose objectives is to encourage every qualified voter to exercise his franchise. — Mary W. Hamilton, Chairman (pro tem), Association of Women Electors (Victoria Branch).

Senate reform

After patriation of our constitution, Senate reform is a must. No longer will Canadians tolerate an arm of government that has not been elected democratically. Unlike the partisan House of Commons, the Senate should represent all categories of Canadian life and culture.

To achieve this objective each province will elect a Senator from each of the following categories: education and culture, labor, economic (law, industry, banking), health and welfare, native peoples, people (those who do not wish a specialized Senator) and agriculture.

In addition to the provincial Senators, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories (which would be divided into east and west) will each elect one native Senator and one other Senator, who will be an ex officio member of all category caucuses.

To ensure a relationship between the federal and provincial governments with the Senate, the government and the major opposition party will appoint a Senator to each province. Each province will appoint a government and a major opposition party Senator. These senators are to be appointed immediately after an election and serve during the life of the government.

The Senate must have a two-thirds majority to veto a law. The proposed legislation would then be returned to the Commons for further consideration where a simple majority vote would pass it.

Caring attitude

This past weekend we were privileged enough to bike through your lovely, clean city. Being inexperienced bikers we were somewhat leery of riding through traffic in a large city. However, without exception the automobile drivers were courteous and gave us a lot of room to manoeuvre.

The clerks in your stores were all so pleasant and cheerful, and everyone we encountered in our journey was kind. It is so very refreshing to find this caring attitude in a large city.

We are very impressed and look forward to our next journey. The city of Victoria is doing an excellent job. We thank you! — Carol A. Cook, Karen M. Hardy, Seattle, Washington.

Not a word

On May 13, the second Mother's Day Right-of-Life Rally and March took place on the front steps of the legislative buildings. Not one word of this event was reported in the next day's Victoria Times.

"The function of the press is very high. It is almost holy. It ought to serve as a forum for the people, through which the people may know freely what is going on. to misstate or suppress the news is a breach of trust," quoting Louis D. Brandeis (Collier's Weekly, March 23, 1912).

Omissions such as this portend a grave future for all Canadians. — Mrs. Therese Williams, 856 Falkland Road.

Great country!

If you, a Canadian, were alone in a strange land, feeling a bit disoriented, and overheard a group of people happily downgrading their country, their prime minister, their provincial premier, their government, etc., relax, you've just found your own! Yes, my dear, that is our national sport!

If someone should say "You Canadians are great!," we stick our collective thumb in our collective mouth and saw "Aw, shucks, you're just saying that!" or we give them a rundown on our sins and omissions — "Aw, we ain't nobody!"

I sure as hell "ain't nobody!" I am somebody! I am a Canadian! Born and raised in the greatest country on this earth — Canada.

I was inspired to write after listening, day after day, to our three leaders spelling out "doom and gloom" unless we support their respective parties. Despite what they say, I cannot find too much wrong or bad about us, or the shape we're in. — D. E. Croft, 308-805 Cook Street.

Forest policy

The Vancouver Island region of the Federation of B.C. Naturalists notes that in the recently concluded provincial election campaign, no political party addressed itself seriously to the total bankruptcy of forest land use policy in B.C.

The prevailing rhetoric governing use of crown forest land in the province is that the logging companies, forest service and the IWA are all staunch defenders of "multiple use" or "integrated resource management." How far from the truth this is. The reality of so-called multiple use is "forest management for the primary production of timber," as dictated by the logging comanies — with the provincial forest service playing the role of handmaiden.

Given that the federal government is responsible for the salmon fishery, are we again to be greeted by a deafening silence on the question of forest land use? Is there to be no examination of the capitulation of federal fisheries to the provincial forest service over the showdown at Riley Creek: "I will not accept that the Canada Fisheries Act calls the shot in timber harvesting in B.C." (Telex from Forests Minister Tom Waterland to federal Fisheries Minister Romeo LeBlanc, Jan. 18.) That capitulation — the decision to clear-cut 40 acres on the steep slopes of a creek in the Queen Charlottes over the opposition of the federal fisheries field staff involved — will have enormous consequences for the longer term interests both of the fishery and forestry resource of this province.

Remember also the Tsitika? — A decision to clear-cut the remnants of this northern Vancouver Island mountainous watershed with openings up to 600 acres in size. This despite years of public concern that the Tsitika valley was different. Remember Southern Moresby? — The renewal of Tree Farm Licence 24 for 25 years without public hearings, over the opposition of many organizations, and despite widespread available documentation showing logging practices on the Charlottes.

The Vancouver Island region of the Federation of B.C. Naturalists believes in real multiple use or true integrated resource management of our crown forest lands. We take a definite stand in support of the position that all interests — forestry, fishery, wildlife, recreational and environmental — must on an equal basis sort out the various problems which will occur in crown forest land use. We oppose the view that one interest, short term corporate profitability — getting the logs out as fast and cheaply as possible, irrespective of the environmental and wildlife consequences — must be the god before which we must all bow down. A correct forest land use policy must protect all resource users.

New selective logging methods are needed in the province, in opposition to the current devastation large scale clear-cutting. Such methods will be more labor intensive and should be supported, not opposed, by the leadership of the IWA.

To protect fish, animals and birds, their needs must be the basic factor in deciding which areas are to be left unlogged for wildlife range and fish habitat. We do not accept that temporary occupancy of crown forest land by logging companies confers private ownership to the standing timber. They have no "rights" to monetary compensation or timber trades for land withdrawn from logging operations, i.e. for the protection of wildlife and fisheries, or for the creation of parks or ecological reserves. At the most, reimbursement of previously paid taxes on the land withdrawn should be considered.

It's time to step up the discussion regarding a long overdue change of the forest land use policy in this province. — David Orton, Regional Vice-President, Vancouver Island Region, Federation of B.C. Naturalists.

The lotteries: Hype disguises miserable odds

Lotteries used to be against the law in Canada. If you wanted to invest a couple of bucks in a million-dollar dream, you had to find a friend who could slip you a ticket on the q.t. for the Irish Sweepstakes.

Then, suddenly, the laws were changed. What had been a sin was suddenly a virtue. Governments from coast to coast got into the act.

Today, Canada has 10 major lotteries, nine of them government-operated. Collectively, they rake in almost $1 billion a year and shell out more than $410 million in cash prizes.

But are they a con game? Some critics think so. According to the Consumers' Association of Canada, lotteries are far from a good investment: "Like so many products of dubious value that sell well, they depend on hype and clever, unceasing advertising."

Bryan Elwood, a Toronto management consultant and an authority on lotteries, says Loto Canada and its offspring have the lowest payoff of any form of gambling.

In the horse races, he points out, 83 per cent of the money goes back to the players. In casino gambling, it's 75 to 95 per cent. In lotteries, it's a maximum of 50 per cent — and often it's only 40 per cent.

"Let's face it: winning a lottery is a long shot or, depending on how you look at it, an incredible stroke of good luck," he says in his self-published Whole World Lottery Guide, which compares the odds against winning prizes in 25 countries.

If you're wondering how our lotteries compare to others, they're about average. The best payoffs were found in the Netherlands (66 per cent) and the worst in Delhi, India (28 per cent). Like half the countries studied, Canada's lottery winnings are tax-free.

Elwood, who seldom buys tickets himself and has never won a prize, feels lotteries should make it easier for buyers to shop around.

By ELLEN ROSEMAN
The Globe and Mail

Odds should be disclosed in advertising and on tickets, he says. Though studies have shown that buyers don't really care about their statistical chances of winning, the information should still be made available.

Also, odds should be standardized so buyers can compare them more easily. This means taking ticket prices into account to arrive at a unit figure.

For example, your chances of winning a million dollars in Loto Canada are one in 271,429, compared to one in 800,000 for the Provincial. But since you pay half as much for the Provincial ticket, the comparative odds per $10 expenditure are actually one in 400,000 for the Provincial, compared to one in 271,429 for Loto Canada.

Lotteries became an election issue in the last few weeks, with the Conservatives promising to fold Loto Canada and hand the business over to the provinces.

"We don't need two levels of government in the lottery field," says PC leader Joe Clark. "Loto Canada alone spends $10 million a year in advertising. It forces the provincial and the regional lotteries to spend advertising money, too, and that all comes off the top."

But Elwood thinks Clark is on the wrong track. In his opinion, Loto Canada is clearly the best of what may be a bad bunch.

In the Whole World Lottery Guide, he ranks the 10 Canadian lotteries in terms of expected cash payoff — meaning the percentage of ticket costs you could expect to recoup in prize money if you played the same game a very large number of times. The higher the expected payoff, the better the game for the player.

The expected cash payoffs (as of February, 1979): Loto Canada 56 per cent, Lottario 50 per cent, Loto Perfecta 48 per cent, Western Express 47.4 per cent, the Provincial 43.4 per cent, Wintario 43 per cent, Inter-Loto 42.8 per cent, Mini-Loto 41.5 per cent, Cash for Life 39.9 per cent, Atlantic A-1 32.8 per cent.

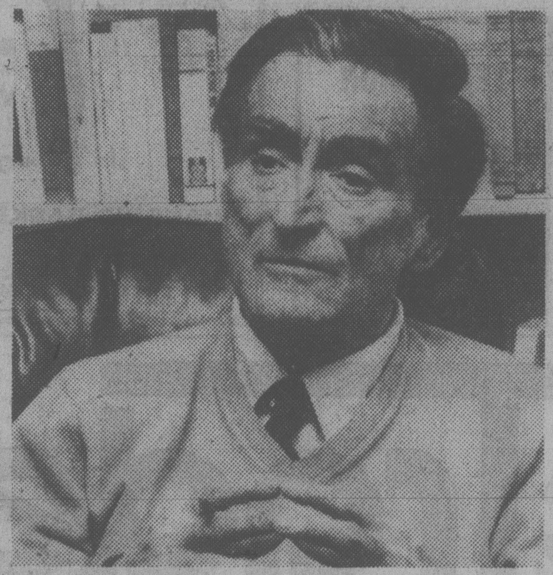
Because of Loto Canada's leadership, says Elwood, the provinces have had to improve their odds and paybacks. If the competition disappeared, consumers would be worse off.

The debate about lotteries will undoubtedly continue long after the federal election. Indeed, Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada is currently doing a study on their long-term effects.

But of all the questions that might by asked about lotteries, it's unfortunate that the Conservatives have chosen to concentrate on one of the least interesting aspects.

Ryan makes strong debut

By WILLIAM JOHNSON



CLAUDE RYAN . . . hit PQ's vulnerable areas

QUEBEC — Claude Ryan, in his maiden speech, landed some telling blows on the Parti Quebecois. I may not be a good judge of his effectiveness; the fact that I agree so strongly with just about everything he said last week in the National Assembly might be why I found him so compelling, so cogent, so utterly convincing.

But I think not. The PQ members sat and listened in silence throughout the 22-minute speech. No heckling, none of the witticisms and inanities that usually attend a speech in the Assembly.

Silently, the government ranks seemed to be sizing him up, taking his measure, probing for his weakness before they start the needling and the hammering.

Ryan quickly, authoritatively, brought the debate to the ground where the PQ is vulnerable, but no one within Quebec has yet been able to capitalize on the vulnerability.

He attacked the concept of sovereignty-association on political grounds. The government and the PQ have been putting out a lot of discussion material on the meaning of sovereignty-association. It will be the focal point of debate at the PQ's biennial convention at the beginning of June. But Ryan simply shot down the concept as "a non-starter."

He quoted the three federal party leaders, former Tory Leader Robert Stanfield, Saskatchewan Premier Allan Blakeney, the four Western premiers jointly, and Ontario Premier William Davis, all of them saying that sovereignty-association is simply not negotiable.

Each of these political leaders of English-speaking Canada had been quoted before in the Assembly. But Ryan read them off one by one, each in turn rejecting the political option on which the PQ has staked its future. It was an impressive litany of denunciation.

Then he accused the PQ of abandoning the leadership which Quebec used to assume at constitutional conferences. Premier Rene Levesque went to the two meetings of the past year with the attitude that nothing was going to happen there anyway. Not surprisingly, Ryan pointed out, he came back confirmed in what he had prophesied.

"There is a very widespread search for change in Canada at present," the Liberal leader said. "We, because of the negative attitude that our government takes in our name, are incapable of channeling this will for change. On the contrary, everything is frozen. Until Quebec takes up its leadership role it cannot be otherwise."

He attacked on ground where all the political parties have until now been quite cautious. He attacked the PQ for its language policy, for Bill 101.

"In the matter of language policy we long exerted a leadership in Canada because we had shown that we were respectful of the rights of our minorities. But since we adopted Bill 101 in this legislature, Quebec has lost its political and moral leadership in these matters."

The provincial Liberals have attacked Bill 101 before, but for particular clauses that they disagreed with, for going too far, for creating a bureaucratic structure which intrudes on the lives of citizens and the operations of corporations. Ryan made no such distinctions. He attacked the language policy itself.

"One of the greatest causes of sorrow of my whole life as a public figure — and it began long before I went into politics — was when I heard one night on English television the Minister of State for Parliamentary Reform (Robert Burns) answering the question of an English-speaking interviewer who asked him, 'Are you not repeating in Quebec what was done in Manitoba in 1890?'

"He (Burns) answered, 'It was time we did it, we were naive and innocent for too long.'

"I infinitely prefer the innocence of all those who preceded us and who were able to speak out. I infinitely prefer that generosity, that fundamental respect for the rights of other groups, to this absolutely unacceptable concern for imitating others."

He also aimed a few barbs at the government for not making public some of the studies prepared at public expense on sovereignty-association and its economic effects. This was not democratic openness, he claimed. Nor was the refusal of the government to make known the timing, and the question, of the coming referendum. What Quebec needs is leadership that can give an impetus to constitutional reform, that can give an example of linguistic tolerance, that will accept open debate rather than manipulation.

Ryan was a powerful debater last week. As of now, he promises to make life interesting for the government and the Parti Quebecois.

Socreds, NDP move toward middle

By JOHN CLARKE

VANCOUVER — In the wake of this month's provincial election, the conventional wisdom here is that B.C. politics have become hopelessly polarized. Ironically, the two parties fighting it out federally, the Liberals and Conservatives, had been virtually wiped out in British Columbia, leaving only the so-called right-wing Social Credit and the so-called left-wing New Democrats.

Because the Socreds and NDP divided the popular vote just about equally, most of the pundits see a sharpening of the right-left division and a prospect of more radical politics in the future.

But when the election campaign and the results, giving the Socreds a mere five-seat margin out of 57 seats, are carefully analyzed, it's clear the schism theory couldn't be further from the truth. In fact, what is happening in British Columbia is a remarkably rapid enlargement of the political centre, in which theoretical labels of right and left will mean progressively less.

Premier Bill Bennett, during the campaign, tried to paint the NDP as raving socialists, no different from the radicals his late father, W.A.C. Bennett, held at bay for 20 years. Because the NDP conducted a low-key campaign, Bennett Junior accused them of running away from their old socialist principles, which were at least honest if misguided.

For his part, NDP leader Dave Barrett was at pains throughout the campaign to assure voters he wouldn't make the same mistakes he had made as premier from 1972 to 1975. He went too far too fast and then would be much more cautious in a new administration.

The Barrett style led David Anderson, former B.C. Liberal leader, to characterize the NDP as the old provincial Liberal party in disguise. He may well have hit close to the mark.

NDP approaches have softened. Most of the old traditional socialists who went into power in 1972 with Barrett have gone and the party no longer owes them any debts. It will be more pragmatic and less doctrinaire, and in that sense Bennett is right in accusing the NDP of deserting "socialism."

The NDP has moved its popular support from about 30 per cent nine years ago to over 46 per cent now, largely by absorbing the Liberal vote and a large chunk of the dissatisfied Conservative vote. In future, it can't afford to alienate that support by being too strident. The likelihood therefore is that it will move closer to the political centre.

The Socreds will do the same. They got a scant 2 per cent more than the NDP in the popular vote and gained very little from 1975. They had the image of a cash-register government that raised income and sales taxes, ferry rates, automobile insurance costs and so on in order to have nicely balanced books. There was a clear impression that human policies were neglected.

It was significant that, in a sober victory speech, Bennett said he would work harder for the people because, "I care for you." He too will have to move closer to the centre.

Party policies are likely, then, to converge rather than divide more widely and that may muddy the waters so that the choices for the voters will be harder and more confusing in the future: That's not polarization. It's popular politics, which was what the NDP intended to pursue when it cooled its rhetoric in the campaign.

Beware the born-again

katharine whitehorn

LONDON — Some people hate cats, some people hate spiders. My own bete noir, though I suppose I shouldn't admit it, is converts. I can't stand the open-soul surgery conducted by trendy Lefties who have just voted Conservative, lifelong atheists who have joined the Plymouth Brethren or feminists who have just had a baby.

One ought to be charitable, of course. People have a perfect right to improve their views; repentance is a central tenet of Christianity; and it's only natural for people who've just given up smoking to lecture you for 10 minutes while not passing you the ashtray. But why do born-again people so often make you wish they'd never been born the first time?

A few weeks ago a paper ran the outpourings of a woman — it's perhaps just as well I can't remember her name — who after a lifetime in the office had suddenly discovered that raising children actually takes skill and brains and stamina — banalities that most of her female readers presumably knew when they were 20.

And Malcolm Muggeridge. He thinks he was knocked off his horse by God, like St. Paul on the road to Damascus; his critics think he simply fell off it from old age. Either way, he'd certainly had his share of the world, flesh and devil in his time. But does he show any understanding for the problems of those who are still tempted? Does he try to work out any middle way, in which perhaps we might not have to choose between Mother Theresa and Nell Gwynne? He does not. He simply rejects the lot, as if he wished sex had never been invented.

Paul Johnson is not the only person who once wrote for the New Statesman who is now fed up with the Left, though he may be the only one who wore a Squire's kneebreeches all along; but he certainly makes more noise about it than most. And Mary Kenny, who used to be a violent feminist, wrote something sensible about mothers a while back; great heavens, I thought, the woman's mellowing. Mellowing schmellowing, said her friends, not on your life; she's just changed sides. She's into hearth, home and Roman Catholicism now.

But didn't Swift say that to admit you were wrong is to say you are wiser today than you were yesterday? Well, yes; but why do they have to swing round like weathervanes from one extreme to the other? Our loony political system may make you choose between one awful crew and the other awful crew when you vote, but you surely don't have to do anything so black and white in your thinking. And if you throw away all you used to know with your old allegiances, you are probably not wiser: you are just foolish in an opposite way.

These straight reversals are too easy; you get credit both ways — once for having been idealistic then, and again for being "realistic" now. But the fact that you've gone off your earlier allies doesn't mean your old enemies have improved. You may no longer believe that if you nationalize milk all the cows will burst out singing, but that doesn't mean you can suddenly stop worrying about Nestle selling bottle-feeding to the Third World. O.K., so maybe science doesn't have all the answers — that doesn't mean that the Pope or the Maharishi suddenly has. There are plenty of sensible stops between Haight-Ashbury and the Vatican, or between Moscow and Washington.

The people I admire are not those who rush at you with their new convictions like a fat woman on a brand-new diet. I admire the ones who try, heaven knows how painfully, to reconcile their old ideals with new ones. I admire George Orwell, who went from Eton to Socialism and out into his own bleak territory beyond, without forgetting anything he had ever once discovered. I admire Michael Young, who admitted three weeks ago that he'd changed his mind about the Big State being the protector of Little People — but certainly isn't assuming that Big Business will now do very nicely instead. I even have an irrational soft spot for Mrs. Annie Powell, the new mayor of Rhondda, who has stayed with the Communists for 40 years because they were nice to Our Boys in the thirties.

To stand like a rock is one way of doing it; to change skins like a snake is another. The hardest thing for anyone to do is to evolve; no wonder so few are rash enough to attempt it.

Board raises its pay

Directors Bob Wright and Al Beasley opposed the raise and Beasley said he will refuse his increase and stick with his $4,299 a year.

Wright said he will ask his wife whether he should accept any raise on top of the $2,756 he now receives.

Executive director Dennis Young originally suggested a 7½ per cent increase.

The directors get pay increases based on their workloads.

Chairman Murray Glazier currently gets $8,029 salary as chairman and also gets pay as a director representing Victoria.

Municipal representatives from the city, Saanich, Oak Bay and Esquimalt receive $2,766 while Esquimalt Mayor Art Young gets $4,013 as chairman of the hospital commission.

Colwood and Langford directors get $5,512; Sooke and Salt Spring directors receive $4,851; Metchosin, View Royal, Outer Gulf Islands, North Saanich, and Sidney directors are paid $4,299 and the Central Saanich director gets $3,448.

Region local to vote

A change in one of the contract demands by the Greater Victoria Labor Relations Association has resulted in a tentative agreement with another local of the Canadian Union of Public Employees.

The 200 members of Local 1978, representing Capital Region District employees, will vote on the agreement Tuesday.

The two-year contract, bascially the same as that offered to the other seven Greater Victoria CUPE locals, provides for a 7.25-per-cent increase in each year.

Greater Victoria Library Board employees have already accepted the agreement.

The GVLRA modified an earlier controversial demand which would have forced the union to pay its members for time off for negotiations or other union business.

The employers' association changed that to allow for time off with pay for negotiations but whenever a third party is called in or the employee is off for Labor Relations Board matters, the union would have to pay him or her.

The demand is a stumbling block in contract talks with city hall inside workers as well as with the Joint Negotiating Committee, representing about 1,800 employees in five CUPE locals.

Rick Doyle, president of Local 388, representing the city hall workers, said today the GVLRA "compromise" on the leave-of-absence clause is not good enough.

"It's just fancier language for the same thing," he said.

Doyle said the GVLRA could simply call in a mediator at an early stage in negotiations and force the union to pick up the tab for its negotiators during the rest of the contract talks.

Meanwhile, the GVLRA board of directors Thursday ratified a one-year agreement with city firefighters.

The contract has already been approved by the firemen. It is tied in with an agreement yet to be reached with Vancouver firefighters.

The Victoria firemen will receive a five-per-cent interim wage increase retroactive to Jan. 1 and once a settlement is reached in Vancouver, their monthly wage will be brought to within $2 of their Vancouver counterparts.

CRD endorses zoning hearing

Three bylaws that would allow multiple-dwelling development in a 17-acre portion of View Royal off Helmcken Road between the Island and Old Island highways will soon go to a public hearing.

The Capital Regional Board Board voted to proceed with the hearing when it met this week but not before Saanich mayor Mel Couvelier tried to delay action by having the matter referred to the regional planning committee.

Couvelier contended Saanich should have been consulted about proposed zoning changes in neighboring View Royal.

He said the area in question was close to Saanich's greenbelt area.

Both his proposal to refer back to committee and another to have the matter tabled for two weeks were turned down by split votes.

Forest fire danger high in some areas

The forest fire danger rating is high in the Fort Nelson-Peace River region and high to extreme at Lillooet, Ashcroft and Lytton, the forest ministry said Thursday.

The ministry said the rate in the rest of the province is low to moderate.

The seasonal fire total now is 295, compared with 198 for the same period in 1978.

One of the most serious forest fires this year burned about 1,200 acres of land earlier this week around St. Mary's Lake, about 40 kilometres southwest of Kimberley. The fire now is nearly under control.

Senior forest ranger John Hogan said Thursday the fire hasn't increased much in size since Monday and crews were working on spot fires on the edges, trying to control burning patches within the perimeter.

'80 ICBC hike 'slight if at all'

B.C. drivers next year will face only marginal increases in auto insurance, if any, Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy said Thursday.

McCarthy, the cabinet minister responsible for the government-operated insurance scheme, said corporation president Robbie Sherrell's statements last week that the rates would have to go up were misinterpreted.

"He said there may be a possibility of slight increases, which I think has been interpreted as major increases. This is not true," she said.

McCarthy said ICBC's profit of $6 million could be wiped out by inflation.

If that is the case, rates may have to increase, but it is far too early to speculate, the minister said.

She said the corporation will have to wait for an accounting breakdown before its financial picture for next year is known.

And that won't take place for some time yet, she added.

Report ready

VANCOUVER (CP) — The conciliator in a dispute involving 4,000 longshoremen at seven British Columbia ports has handed in his report.

However, details of the report by Mr. Justice Henry Hutcheon of the British Columbia Supreme Court have not been released.

Completion of the report leaves the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union in a legal position to take strike action in a week's time.

Spray halted

VANCOUVER (CP) — A pesticide spray program designed to stop the infestation of the destructive gypsy moth in the city's Kitsilano residential district was halted shortly after it started Thursday, but not by protesters.

Federal agriculture ministry workers managed to spray the pesticide carbaryl on about 25 trees in a city-owned tract of land before 20 kilometre-an-hour winds forced them to stop. Weather permitting, the spraying is to resume today.

Spraying of the pesticide will be limited to properties of residents who voluntarily approved the program and to city-owned boulevards.

Inmates move

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — The transfer of prisoners from the ancient and often troubled British Columbia Penitentiary to prisons in other provinces began Thursday, said spokesman Jack Stewart of the Canadian Penitentiary Service.

Stewart said 23 prisoners from the federal maximum-security institute left by chartered aircraft and two more prisoners —from prisons at nearby Mission and Matsqui — also were aboard the flight.

Snow pack average

River water levels are down throughout B.C. and snow pack levels are average or below normal, a spokesman for the environment ministry's water investigation branch said Thursday.

Cooler temperatures in the first two weeks of May have slowed the snow melt and delayed the annual spring rise of river levels, the spokesman said.

Bell-Irving misses tricky sand bar

KINCOLITH (CP) — The sand bar that sweeps into the Nass River here is called Governor's Bar, a name that several chuckling Nishga Indians were delighted to explain when British Columbia's current lieutenant-governor visited the village Thursday.

No two versions were the same, but the gist of the story is that a lieutenant-governor ran his motor launch aground when he came to visit near the beginning of the century. Amused Indian onlookers ferried dignitaries ashore and helped push the boat off the bar.

Several Nishgas claimed that former Lt.-Gov. George Pearkes repeated the performance when either his boat or seaplane — depending on who's telling the story — was marooned in the 1960s.

Henry Bell-Irving, the current lieutenant-governor, flew to the isolated north coast community by helicopter, avoiding the embarrassment of his predecessors. But he had an advantage — he worked near Kincolith and traversed its sand bar in the early 1930s.

When he was a student at the University of B.C., Bell-Irving spent two summers working for his family's company, the Anglo-British Columbia Packing Co. He was in charge of a fish-packing boat that towed Indian gillnetters out to sea at night, then picked up their salmon in the morning.

The company had a cannery at Arrandale, just across the mouth of the Nass, but like many other cannery towns throughout the Nass and Skeena Valleys it was deserted years ago.

Kincolith was first settled in the 1860s by Nishgas from up the valley who had converted to Christianity and were not getting along with the others. It was once home for about 1,000, but now has a population of between 350 and 450, depending on the season.

Like other Nishgas throughout the valley, some residents work locally as loggers, others go to work in Prince Rupert, and a few are commercial fishermen.

Bell-Irving told an assembly at the local elementary school that he had looked forward to his return for many years and felt he came back not as a stranger but "as someone who knows this town well and who always felt comfortable here."

After flying up the valley as part of his effort to make the role of the monarchy more evident in B.C., Bell-Irving urged Nishgas to work to maintain the civilization he had seen in the past.

"The Nishga I knew in those days were great fishermen, great people, and they had their own civilization as well," he said. "As you get more and more into our city things, that will be fine, but don't lose your own civilization and customs."

The Nishga, in a case they lost on a technicality in the Supreme Court of Canada in 1973, have laid claim to 5,000 square miles of the Nass Valley.

Negotiations between the Nishga and the federal and provincial governments have dragged since then.

Seizure of vehicles urged to combat bad drivers

B.C. drivers convicted of serious offences and those with substantial demerit points could have their cars seized in the future.

That possibility was raised by Neil McDiarmid, chairman of B.C.'s Motor Vehicle Task Force, at a public meeting here Thursday night.

McDiarmid told a gathering of about 60 at the Ingraham Hotel that seizure of vehicles is one option being considered by the task force.

The group is holding a series of meetings to come up with recommendations for the government on how to make the roads safer and traffic laws more efficient.

McDiarmid said the proposal that dangerous drivers have their cars seized is a suggestion that crops up at nearly every meeting.

A number of individuals made presentations to the task force with most calling for tighter controls on drivers who endanger the public.

James Bay Residents' League information officer Charles Ball called on the task group to see that hotrodders are removed from the streets and highways.

Ball said they are a "violent and anti-social criminal class."

Victoria NDP MLA Charles Barber said traffic fines should be keyed to the offender's income.

Barber said a $400 fine to a person earning $40,000 a year was insignificant, but to people earning only $8,000 a year such a fine would be a real hardship.

McDiarmid replied that a Swedish system of tying fines to pay rates is being investigated by his group.

Police complaints in Saanich 'drivel'

Saanich police board Thursday reacted with disbelief and some derision to a complaint from the Saanich Police Association that the department lacks proper supplies of basic equipment, including such items as revolvers, ammunition, flashlights, pens and notebooks.

Mayor Mel Couvelier, the board chairman, was inclined to attribute the letter to a misunderstanding as to what is available and where it is kept, but board member John Tribe said bluntly: "I don't think it's a misunderstanding, I just think they haven't bothered to find out."

Tribe dismissed the letter as incredible drivel and said the association seems bent on taking shots at the police board on every occasion.

Chief Bob Peterson expressed surprise at the complaint. He said although some orders for equipment have still to be placed, and the department is awaiting delivery of others, the general situation with regard to equipment is excellent.

Inspector Ron Coulter said no official complaint about shortages had been referred to senior officers.

Asked about revolvers, he said a check April 23 showed every department member had been issued a revolver, and in addition there were seven in stores for breakdown replacements.

The board decided to inform the association that it should take its complaint through the proper channels, with Couvelier adding the afterthought that officers should "look in the proper cupboards" before complaining that items are not available.

In other business Thursday, the board agreed to ask Saanich Ald. Geoff Vantreight to either substantiate or withdraw his recent charges concerning improper use of police vehicles.

The alderman, a former police board member, had alleged that some senior officers and detectives take municipal vehicles home "and leave them on their driveway all night."

Tribe said he resented Vantreight's remarks, and fellow board member Reg Midgley called the sweeping criticism irresponsible.

Bulging building expansion vetoed

Saanich's public safety building on Vernon is bulging at the seams but the police board doesn't want to see the building expanded on a piecemeal basis.

Although board members agreed Thursday with Chief Bob Peterson that the police and fire departments need more space, they said a thorough study should be undertaken to determine more accurately how much accommodation is needed and where it should be provided.

The two departments had tentatively suggested an extension of about 5,700 square feet to the present building, which has a total floor space of more than 31,000 square feet.

But police board member John Tribe said that might be a pointless exercise and a waste of money if it was found in five years that the departments had again outgrown their quarters.

(The original structure was built 18 years ago, and added to 10 years later).

However, Peterson pointed out there are a number of administrative advantages in having the police and fire functions adjacent to the municipal hall.

"But we are terribly crowded and desperately in need of space," he said, listing among other deficiencies inadequate shower and toilet facilities for female officers, a tiny cafeteria and cramped working conditions for detectives.

The board decided to refer the matter to Saanich council, with a request that the municipal administrator initiate a survey of accommodation requirements and desirable locations for the two departments.

Hydro line shot out

B.C. Hydro is offering $2,500 for information leading to the identification of the person or persons responsible for shooting at a power pole recently and breaking four insulators on a 60,000-volt transmission line west of Port Alberni.

In order to repair the damage, there was a two-hour power blackout starting at 12:30 p.m. today for Ucluelet, Tofino and Long Beach.

Coast Guard Day Sunday

Sunday is Coast Guard Day with the base at 203 Harbour Road in the Inner Harbor open to the public from noon to 3 p.m.

The buoy tenders CCGS Narwhal and CCGS Douglas can be toured and there will be displays of lamps, horns, major lights and other navigational aids.

As in past years, draws will be held for helicopter flights in an Alouette.

Two flights, leaving at approximately 12:30 p.m. and 2 p.m. will take four people to Race Rocks where they will stay for an hour before returning to Victoria.

Their stay at the lightstation could provide them with a first-class view of boats on the last leg of the Swiftsure sailing classic which begins Saturday morning.

There will also be helicopter flights over the city.

today's markets

Toronto

TORONTO (CP) — The Toronto stock market rose sharply in active mid-afternoon trading today.

Among industrials, Aquitaine of Canada gained 1¾ to $32¾, Alberta Natural Gas 1⅜ to $55⅛, Bow Valley Industries 1¼ to $28½, Teledyne Canada 1⅛ to $13 and Texaco Canada 1 to $64.

La Verendrye Management lost 1 to $8.

New York

NEW YORK (AP) — Despite news that consumer prices had risen at a 13.2 per cent annual rate in April, stock prices were mixed today. Analysts had expected the rise in consumer prices, and said the market took it calmly as a result.

Just before the market opened, the labor department announced that consumer prices had risen 1.1 per cent in April, or 13.2 per cent on an annual basis. That compared with a one per cent jump in March and a 1.2 percent increase in February.

The rise in consumer prices was fed by a six per cent increase in gasoline prices in April, the biggest leap in gas prices since a 7.3 per cent increase in March 1974 during the Arab oil embargo. Gas prices have risen 49.6 per cent since the beginning of the year, the labor department said

Ashland Petroleum headed the active list, off ⅝ to $42⅜ with several large blocks changing hands. Ashland has been rumored to be considering an offer for NLT Corp., which was also active and up 1⅜ to $29⅝.

Montreal

MONTREAL (CP) — Prices edged up fractionally in moderate trading on the Montreal Stock Exchange today. Brascan A was up ⅜ at $24½, CP Ltd. ⅛ at $30¾, Interprovincial PipeLine A ⅜ at $19½, Norcen Energy Resources ½ at $21, Reed Stenhouse ¼ at $9½, and TransCanada PipeLines ¼ at $21½. Bank of Montreal was down ⅛ at $23, Bell Canada ⅛ at $22⅛, Imasco ¼ at $41½, Southam Press ⅝ at $26, and Union Gas A ⅛ at $10⅜.

London

LONDON (Reuter) — Disappointing company results and a rise in domestic oil prices sent the London stock market sharply lower near the close of trading today. The Financial Times index was down 7.4 to 504.2. Industrials, oils and banks were weak but mining shares firmed. Canadian shares eased.

VANCOUVER

VANCOUVER (CP) — Prices were up in moderately active trading today on the Vancouver Stock Exchange. Volume to 11 a.m. PDT was 1,791,106 shares.

In the industrials, Daon Development was unchanged at $11 3-4 on 9,800 shares and Kaiser Resources was up 1-4 at $19 7-8 on 4,000. Canadian Javelin was unchanged at $1.55 on 2,000 shares and Hal Roach Studios was up .20 at $3.70 on 2,000. Ardiem Industries was unchanged at .22 and Grouse Mountain was down .02 at .72.

On the resource and development board, Osec Petroleum A was down .10 at $2 on 290,700 shares and Suzie Mining Exploration was up .06 at .77 on 50,800.

Fuel delays SST

SEATTLE (AP) — Fuel availability will determine when the supersonic transport airplane is developed in the United States, but a domestic SST eventually will be built, says a Boeing Co. official.

William Hamilton, vice-president for research and development, told an aerospace conference that the SST uses more fuel per-passenger-mile than any other aircraft and there will have to be an adequate energy supply plan before it can be built in the U.S.

Bernard Darieux, special assistant to the president of France's aerospace firm, said the market for the SST will be very small before 1990.

He said noise and fuel consumption are the SST's main problems. France and Great Britain jointly developed the supersonic Concorde aircraft.

Dunlop develops tire flats don't bother

LONDON (CP) — The Dunlop Tire Co. has announced development of a tire that enables motorists to drive distances of up to 160 kilometres at speeds of 80 km.p.h. with one or more flats.

Previously the company had been working on a combination wheel and tire arrangement — called Denovo — with up to 30 component parts, but it proved both complicated and expensive.

The new development — Denovo 2 — has enabled the company to cut the number of components to three — wheel, tire and valve.

Two grooves in the rim of the new wheel lock the beads of the tire and prevent it from being dragged off when flat. Tests have shown that this new bead-locking system is as effective in retaining a flat tire as the two-piece wheel of the earlier, more complicated version.

It also allows conventional service equipment to be used when fitting or changing tires.

Inside Denovo 2 the back of the tread is smeared with a fat-like substance which seals most leaks before the tire goes flat.

But in the event of a serious leak which cannot be sealed quickly, the tire and wheel design allows the wheel rims to run without damage on the folded sidewalls of the tire, and normal control of the car is retained.

The new wheel-and-tire combination is lighter than its predecessor and the one-piece wheels can be built on existing wheel-making machinery.

The British tire company has already signed contracts to sell the new product to car manufacturers in France, Italy and Japan. It also is holding licensing discussions with manufacturers in the United States.

The first car to have the Denovo 2 as an option will be British Leyland's Rover.

No rate war: port official

SEATTLE (AP) — The Port of Vancouver, has been losing business in container cargo traffic with the Far East, but a price war with its major competitor is unlikely, says a port official.

Statistics show that Seattle has cornered 45 per cent of Canada's container cargo traffic to the Far East — about 50,000 six-metre containers a year or 15 per cent of Seattle's foreign container traffic.

"We're hoping we can service people better and snitch some of that business back," said Mike Mulholland, manager of trade development for the Port of Vancouver.

"But we're not going to rush out and do something stupid and start a rate war with Seattle."

In 1978, 650,000 six-metre containers moved through Seattle, compared with 113,000 in Vancouver. The reason, officials say, is pure economics.

Port of Seattle analyst Paul Chilcote said container ships cost so much money that the only way to make them pay is to keep them running at full capacity, adding it is cheaper to ship partial shiploads by land than by diverting a ship to another port.

He said that if big shipping lines stop at Seattle, it takes an extra 1½ days to stop at Vancouver and more than that to stop at Portland.

U.S. oil profits hardly 'obscene'

By JOHN BERRY

WASHINGTON (WP) — As part of his campaign to sell a windfall profits tax on oil, President Carter exclaimed that the oil companies "are already awash with their greatest profits since the OPEC embargo."

Sen Thomas Eagleton (Democrat—Mo.), one of several bitter opponents of the other part of Carter's plan, decontrol of crude oil prices, considers oil company profit levels "obscene."

What motorists in Los Angeles waiting in line to buy gasoline think about oil company profits probably can't be printed, with prices up 10 cents to 15 cents a gallon so far this year and still not enough to go around.

The companies still are reaping the legacy of the use of the great political power they held for so many years. Control of the world oil market has slipped from their grasp and into the hands of OPEC (the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries), but the public's perceptions do not reflect the oil industry's new role.

Moreover, a shortage of gasoline is threatening Americans' deep emotional tie to their automobiles, an intrusion into their sense of personal privilege so serious that it demands a villain to pillory.

It should come as no surprise, then, that suspicious consumers blame the companies for the unexpected scarcity and soaring prices; and that they suspect that these are tied to enormous profits for the oil companies.

But are Carter and Eagleton and all the other critics right? Are the companies awash with profits? Are their earnings "obscene?"

A close look at the finances of 27 large oil companies for the last decade shows that the industry's earnings are not spectacular — even when adjusted for some of the industry's peculiar accounting practices are relatively low federal income tax burdens. Certainly the earnings are far less spectacular than the political diatribes they inspire.

Nevertheless, almost all of the 27 companies — each of which had sales of $1 billion of more last year — are doing significantly better these days than immediately prior to the quadrupling of oil prices. Decidedly, higher prices for oil have not hurt the big companies, with one or two exceptions.

And some small companies and individual operators — aided by preferential treatment in the oil price control regulations mandated by the same Congress now so upset by profits of the large companies — have done extraordinarily well. Large private fortunes still are being made in oil.

But the big companies, everyone's favorite whipping boys, have not been major beneficiaries of the huge increase in oil prices since 1973, the analysis shows.

By far the majority of all those extra dollars being extracted from irate motorists by the spinning dials on gasoline pumps are going to the oil-exporting nations, whether members of OPEC of not. The oil companies are garnering only a small portion of the monopoly profits the OPEC cartel is generating.

Naturally, the oil industry itself defends its profits as reasonable and not very different from the earnings of other industries. And oil executives all maintain that their business should not be subject to any special taxes.

"The industry is becoming the victim of big numbers," complains Theodore Burtis, president of Sun Co. "Our operations are on an immense scale, and all the numbers have a lot of zeros behind them."

"If you look at our rate of return, it's not out of line," says Mobil Chairman Rawleigh Warner Jr.

Energy Secretary James Schlesinger, with words far different from Carter's, seems to agree. It is "a misconception that at this point oil company profits are spectacularly high," he says. They "certainly are reasonable."

Reasonableness, like obscenity, lies in the eye of the beholder. One good test of reasonableness, however, comes from a variety of comparisons between the large oil companies and non-oil industrial companies of similar size.

When sales are used to indicate ranking, 10 of the 20 largest industrial corporations in the country last year were oil companies — though they long have been doing many things besides finding and pumping oil out of the ground.

Bolstered by the biggest of all, General Motors Corp., and its $3.5 billion in profits, the non-oil 10 earned $12.2 billion in 1978, even though one, Chrysler Corp., had a loss. The 10 largest oil companies, on the other hand, made a total of $10.2 billion.

GM's profit was more than $700 million higher than that of Exxon — by far the largest oil company — even though Exxon had $41.5 billion worth of assets compared to GM's $30.6 billion.

More importantly, the non-oil corporations did better in terms of the basic measure most financial analysts and economists would use to compare profits at different companies: the after-tax rate of return on stockholders' equity.

Using this key measure, the non-oil corporations among the top 20 industrials earned an average 14.5 per cent return in 1978. The oil 10 earned less, 12.9 per cent.

Strikingly, the top seven corporations in terms of rate of return were not oil companies, though numbers 8, 9 and 10 were.

The rate of return within the oil group ranged from a low of 9.0 per cent for Texaco — which last year made only slightly more than it did in 1972 even though its sales have more than tripled — to 15.1 per cent for Standard Oil Co.

The spread was much greater among the non-oil Big 10. This is not surprising because several industries are involved. There the return on stockholders' equity ran from IBM's 23.1 per cent down to Chryler's loss.

If the oil company profits are "exorbitant," "outrageous," "undeserved" or "unearned," as members of the House and Senate have described them, why are there no complaints about the massive earnings of GM, or of General Electric, or Procter £ Gamble, of Du Pont?

Of all the 27 oil companies that had sales of $1 billion or more last year, the top rate of return on equity, 22.1 per cent, was earned by Standard Oil (Ohio), whose Alaskan crude finally began to flow. Coca-Cola, Boeing and 3-M Corp. did almost as well. Lockheed, Avon Products, Kellogg, Levi Strauss, NCR and The Washington Post, among others, did better.

More comprehensive comparisions, such as one offered recently by Emil Sunley, deputy assistant treasury secretary for tax policy, in testimony to the Senate finance committee, also indicate that oil companies are not doing much better than non-oil manufacturing companies.

Using data from Standard £ Poor's "Compustat" file covering 3,000 publicly held corporations, Sunley found that in 1977 the after-tax rate of return on equity was slightly less, 14.7 per cent, for companies engaged in oil and gas extraction than for non-oil manufacturing corporations, whose return averaged 14.8 per cent. The larger integrated oil companies — those with refining and marketing activities as well as oil and gas production, which includes all of the 27 mentioned above — had a still smaller return, 13.5 per cent.

Big oil did do much better in 1974 immediately after oil prices rose so sharply, partly on the basis of large gains on the sale of inventories that had been accumulated at much lower cost. That year, the integrated oil companies averaged an 18.4 per cent return on equity compared with 13.0 per cent for the non-oil companies. By 1976, however, the integrated companies again had slipped behind the other group.

Oil industry critics, however, argue that oil company accounting methods cannot be trusted.

The industry's accounting, like that for all companies, is marvelously elastic. All the same, oil companies have some special opportunities to make their balance sheets look better or worse in the short run. Most of them relate to how a company treats the expenses incurred in looking for oil and gas.

Almost all of the major companies treat the cost of preliminary geophysical surveys as a current expense. And when a well is drilled, they also consider all "intangible drilling costs" — anything, such as wages, that doesn't relate to a piece of equipment — as current expense.

In most industries, such expenses would have to be capitalized, that is, counted as a capital investment that would be recovered bit by bit during the time the oil well was productive. This process of counting as an expense each year the reduction in value as an asset wears out is called depreciation.

The industry's approach of "expensing" a portion of capital investment inflates current costs and reduces current reported profits. At the same time, it also reduces reported levels of capital investment.

One tricky question that different companies handle in different ways is what to do when the hole in the ground turns out to be dry. There have been major disagreements among accountants on this point, and the Securities and Exchange Commission, unhappy about both alternatives now in use, has a committee at work trying to come up with a more realistic approach.

The larger companies generally use what is called the "successful efforts" approach. That simply means that when they come up with a dry hole, they write it off right away as a current expense, which further reduces current reported profits.

One point beyond dispute is that oil company books do not reflect the companies' true worth.

The critics point to all these accounting problems and conclude that the industry is not reporting all of what ought to be counted as profits. However, investors in the stock market can count, too, and oil company stocks have not performed as if the industry was sitting on a hidden bonanza.

Fortune magazine has calculated a total return to investors for the major companies in its list of industrials for the last 10 years. It assumes someone bought stock in one of the companies at the end of 1968 and sold it at the end of 1978. In addition, of course, the buyer would have gotten dividends and any stock splits or stock dividends.

Over the decade, investors in the 10 largest oil companies would have received an average annual return of 5.5 per cent, according to Fortune. That's better than the non-oil group, with investors in Chrysler and ITT losing money, and the return on the others averaging 4.4 per cent.

In sum, the oil companies, big and little, and their stockholders are doing very well, thank you. But obscene? Hardly.

Hands off asbestos: Rene

QUEBEC (UPC) — Quebec Premier Rene Levesque said Thursday he would view as "political interference" any move by the U.S. State Department to become involved in his government's attempts to takeover Asbestos Corp.

The Quebec government was trying to negotiate the purchase of Asbestos Corp., with its majority shareholder, General Dynamics Corp., of St. Louis, but it was proceeding with a bill to expropriate it if no agreement were reached.

Lee Verstandig, an aide to U.S. Senator John Chaffee of Rhode Island, had said this week the U.S. State Department could take on a "broker role that will buy time" to find some way to avoid expropriation.

General Dynamics has a 54.6 per cent interest in the 101-year-old Asbestos Corp., Quebec's second largest producer of asbestos with global sales of 300,000 tons of fibre annually.

The Quebec government was offering a maximum $42 a share while General Dynamics maintains the shares are worth just under $100 each. Levesque said the negotiations "stand uncertain and unconcluded.

"I don't think it has anything to do with any kind of political interference and it shouldn't," Premier Levesque said.

"It's basically a question of dealing between two parties, one being a public authority here and the other happening to be a multinational in the United States.

"It's a deal that has to be concluded in a reasonable way by dealing together or go to the courts, but I don't see where any kind of political intervention has a role to play there."

Quebec Natural Resources Minister Yves Berube said the U.S. embassy in Ottawa had made several inquiries about the issue. He said Quebec offered to let the embassy become an observer in the negotiations but embassy officials declined.

Guy Fiske, the executive vice-president of General Dynamics, said Wenesday a few U.S. companies had expressed concern about the economic feasibility of investing in Quebec.

"Several large industries are worried about investing in Canada, and not just Quebec," he said.

Levesque shrugged off the possible loss of U.S. investment income in the province because of the expropriation issue.

"I think it's more or less par for the course, for the moment," Levesque said.

AirCan profits decline

MONTREAL (CP) — Air Canada has announced 1979 first quarter profits after tax of $3.4 million, down from $6.7 million for the same period last year.

Operating income declined to $4.8 in the first quarter from $11.8 million in the comparable period in 1978, "partly due to a deferral of an application by Canadian airlines for a general rate increase of five per cent," the company said in a statement.

Air Canada noted the rate increase was later granted by federal authorities, but the deferral resulted in a sharp drop in the operating margin since the company had to cover cost escalations — "particulary in fuel and labor" — from general revenues.

Transatlantic passenger traffic fell two per cent below the 1978 figures, the company noted, but "the spectacular results from the mass marketing of surplus seats for the seven-week period preceding summer are increasing the load factors for April and May."

Soft drugs permitted in student lounge only

TORONTO (CP) — George Brown College accepts the use of marijuana and hashish in the student lounge at its Casa Loma campus but will not tolerate the use of hard drugs or liquor, the college's administrative vice-president said Thursday.

John Stephens said that while the college has a responsibility to maintain the law, it regards the student lounge as a private area and is not interfering with students who smoke soft drugs there.

Stephens said students are warned they may be suspended if they use drugs elsewhere at the college. He personally believes drug use affects students' abilities and said he has received a letter of complaint from a parent worried about the Casa Loma situation.

The college's St. James campus follows the same policy as Casa Loma. Although it doesn't have a student lounge, soft drugs are smoked around the pin-ball area, Stephens said.

Spokesmen for two other college campuses — Kensington and College's — said smoking drugs is not allowed on their premises and authorities would not turn a blind eye to it.

Most students interviewed Thursday in the Casa Loma lounge said the only drugs available there were soft ones, like marijuana and hash. All said alcohol was rarely seen.

Patti Williams, 28, a student council member whose office adjoins the lounge, said students don't bother anyone and faculty members using table-tennis equipment in the lounge often walk past.

Williams said faculty members do not stop the students but "if I went upstairs to the administration to complain, I'm sure they'd be down here in a flash."

‘Controls don’t work here’

OTTAWA (CP) — The best any Canadian government can expect from a price-wage control program is a marginal drop in inflation, but controls could have a major impact in the United States, says Thomas Maxwell, chief economist of the Conference Board in Canada.

Maxwell was briefing reporters on a board analysis of three years of wage and price controls in Canada. The analysis was made public Thursday.

The Canadian economy is so sensitive to conditions abroad — in raw material prices, imported consumer goods and world price levels for its exports — that the government is able to control only 60 per cent of prices.

“Given an economy with a lot of the price level beyond our control, we can hardly expect the effect of any price-wage control program to be more than marginal,” he said.

The United States is in a different position because it has a more self-sufficient economy.

Maxwell said Scandinavian countries, with open economies similar to Canada’s, had learned this several years ago and had largely abandoned income controls as an anti-inflation strategy.

Three years of controls made Canadian inflation no worse than it would have been, he said, but there is little evidence it improved price levels much.

“In a country like this, there isn’t going to be any single cure for inflation,” Maxwell said. “Our objectives have to be limited.”

The study, conducted over two years by board economist Reginald Letourneau, showed that the program started in October, 1975, had restrained wage gains much more than price increases.

Without the controls an average worker would have taken home $20 more a week by the end of 1978, the study showed. The average wage level at that time would have been $287.50 instead of the $267.50 reported by Statistics Canada.

The effect on prices was much smaller. The study concludes that without controls they would have risen only two to 2.5 per cent more in the three-year period.

The New Democratic Party consistently charged the government with imposing wage limits without effectively restraining prices and profits. It said workers were unfairly penalized by the controls program.

Asked if labor negotiators could cite the study in demanding large catch-up wage increases, board economist Charles Barrett said: “I think any labor negotiator determined to bargain for large increases would have known this before our study.”

Maxwell suggested one benefit of the control program which economists cannot measure is that it may have reduced people’s expectations.

“Expectations have changed” said Maxwell, adding that the inflationary psychology might have been turned around without controls.

Maxwell said the only lesson he could see from the board study was that inflation is hard to beat.

$2B speech hit

EDMONTON (CP) — The Progressive Conservative government introduced more than $2-billion worth of programs promised during the election campaign in its speech from the throne Thursday and outlined new schemes for children and the handicapped.

But opposition leaders dismissed the effort as a failure.

The speech included promises to “enhance significantly” assistance for children with major handicaps.

The government would also move toward planning of a facility for blind and multiple-handicapped children, and improve services at the Alberta School for the Deaf.

Bob Clark, official Opposition leader, called the speech a rehash and NDP Leader Grant Notley denounced the speech as “a regurgitation of announcements that have already been made.”

How Your Garden Grows

Caring for indoor plants

House plants can add interest to any home. There are many types available, but all require the following:

1. Abundant indirect light. All plants depend on light for their metabolic processes, and will not survive long at low light intensity. The light source can be a window, incandescent bulbs or fluorescent tubes.
2. Sufficient water. Indoor plants should be watered thoroughly—but the soil or growing medium should be allowed to dry between waterings. Perfect drainage is required to prevent water retention and consequent rotting of plant roots.
3. Adequate plant food. A completely balanced plant food containing nitrogen, phosphorous and potash is recommended. Any of these products will do the job:

Green Valley Hi-Sol 20-20-20, which also contains minor plant food elements.

Green Valley Liquid Fish Fertilizer.

Each of these products should be mixed with water prior to application. Indoor plants should be fed every 2 to 3 weeks during spring and summer. Feeding should taper off to once a month during the fall, and stop altogether in December and January.

To avoid problems with soil insects and diseases, use a good sterilized potting soil such as Green Valley Potting Soil. Plants should be repotted at least once a year—otherwise, toxic materials build up which may adversely affect the plant.

PLANT FOOD

Hydroponic Gardening

Hydroponics involves growing plants without soil, and is becoming recognized as a more efficient way to grow a wide range of flowers and vegetables.

In place of soil, an aggregate such as vermiculite, sand, pebbles or sawdust is used. This growing medium is kept moist—but not overly wet—at all times, and suitable plant nutrients are added at regular intervals.

Green Valley Hydroponic Plant Food is specially formulated for this type of gardening. Used as directed, this soluble plant food will help you create a highly fertile growing environment.

With hydroponics, you can grow beautiful flowers and nutritious vegetables under controlled conditions.

Olympic 'wagers' bared

MONTREAL (CP) — The Quebec inquiry into the 1976 Olympic Games has concluded public hearings and now will settle down to the job of preparing a report by September on unanswered questions.

How, for example, did the so-called "modest" estimate of $120 million for building the Olympic facilities become a $1.33 billion deficit.

The inquiry commission, headed by Superior Court Justice Albert Malouf, released a mound of documents Thursday summarizing some of the private testimony in its investigation, revealing close interrelationships between a number of men who figured prominently in the Olympic story.

One of the documents showed that Claude Rouleau, before being appointed chairman of the Olympic installations board in November, 1975, received tens of thousands of dollars in wagers or gifts from several contractors involved in construction for the Games.

Rouleau won $42,000 in a bet on the outcome of the 1973 Quebec elections from Regis Trudeau, an engineering consultant whose firm received fees of $7.2 million from the City of Montreal for work on the Olympic stadium, the document revealed.

Commission lawyer Francois Beaudoin said Rouleau became friendly with Trudeau and two other Olympic contractors and won $10,000 playing cards with one of them.

The documents also showed that Rouleau shared an apartment in Quebec City between 1970 and 1977 with three men, including Trudeau and Paul Desrochers, who was then an adviser and fund-raiser for the Quebec Liberal party.

In 1973, Mayor Jean Drapeau consulted Desrochers when the city was about to award a contract on the Olympic stadium.

In August, 1975, three months before the installations board came into being, Rouleau received $10,000 from Marcel Dufour, president of a drilling and soil-testing company, who later won an engineering contract worth $507,893.

Rouleau was also said to have received Christmas gifts of $4,000 in 1971, 1973 and 1975 from Claude Desjardins, whose firm had Olympic contracts. Rouleau denied receiving the money, but Desjardins testified that the gifts were intended to improve their working relations.

Rouleau said he could not remember receiving a cheque for $9,559 drawn by Desrochers and two others in July, 1976, on a Liberal party bank account which was used to cover expenses of then premier Robert Bourassa.

Policemen face assault charges

Justice of the Peace Neil Burgess issued the charges Thursday against S.Sgt. Rupert Novis and Sgts. Patrick Kelly, John Jackson and Ronald Totty after an interview with Rodney Edward Turner, 22, in his cell.

Earlier, provincial court Judge Walter Hryciuk refused a bail request from Turner who faces charges of robbery and theft in a $22,200 robbery of a Canadian Tire store May 9, and a charge of assaulting police arising from the May 15 interrogation.

Turner spent eight days in hospital under police guard until last Tuesday when he was transferred to the Toronto (Don) Jail.

Turner says he was taken to a small room in a suburban police station May 15, ordered to strip, handcuffed to a chair and blindfolded.

He said his legs were pulled apart and police "pulled something cold from the top to the bottom" of his scrotum.

June 4 to go swimmingly

By VICTOR MACKIE
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Prime Minister-elect Joe Clark and Maureen McTeer will soon get to use the $200,000 covered swimming pool built for Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau at 24 Sussex Drive, the official residence.

They will be moving in during the week of June 4 and intend to make good use of the pool with their young daughter and friends, even though Joe is far from a proficient swimmer. Since being elected to Parliament, he has taken lessons.

Clark and McTeer will be moving into the luxurious surroundings provided by the public works department for Trudeau and his family.

The 20-by-40 foot covered pool is connected to the residence by a tunnel. The cost of constructing the pool and tunnel was paid by a group of anonymous donors. It aroused a storm in Parliament when it was being built in 1975 as some opposition MPs questioned the propriety of private donors putting up the funds to build such a costly swimming pool for the leader of the government.

Renovations to the official residence since Trudeau assumed office in 1968, cost the taxpayers more than $297,000, the Commons has been informed. Structural changes and re-decorating was involved in a new family area installed at Margaret's insistence, after the prime minister won the 1974 election.

That area on the second floor was out of bounds to all but members of the family and their closest friends. Margaret Trudeau in her book Beyond Reason, describes how Justin, their first-born son, peered through the door to the private area after public works had finished it. He raced through it shouting "freedom, freedom." Thereafter it was dubbed the "Freedom Room."

Few have had a look at the new family quarters. The cost of the furnishings and structural changes was also raised in Parliament and Margaret reveals that the reaction of the prime minister was one of anger. She quotes him as saying: "We'll pay for the Freedom Room ourselves and take it with us when we go."

She was proud of the design and interior decorating. Margaret says: "It was exceedingly luxurious, something we were . . . criticized for by our friends in Parliament."

Inquiry sought

OTTAWA (CP) — Postal union leader Jean-Claude Parrot said Thursday the new Progressive Conservative government should appoint a royal commission into labor strife in the post office.

The national president of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers noted in a press release that Conservative Leader Joe Clark during the election campaign said he wanted to attack conditions leading to problems rather than provoke confrontations.

Some glum faces as Liberals meet

OTTAWA (UPC) —There were some sad Liberal faces, some smiling Liberal faces and a cabinet minister who admitted he was looking for a new job after a general election that decimated Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau's party.

"I am looking forward to sitting on the opposition," said a ruddy-faced External Affairs Minister Don Jamieson minutes after leaving a six-hour cabinet meeting called by Trudeau to regroup the Liberal forces and look at party priorities.

None of the ministers would say what was discussed in the meeting that will be one of the last sessions before a Tory minority government takes power reportedly around June 4.

Said Jamieson: "The Liberals are not going to be obstructionist and we will try to be as co-operative as possible."

However, Jamieson cautioned ministers in prime minister-elect Joe Clark's cabinet to watch out during question period.

"I would hate to be a junior minister in the Clark cabinet with the likes of Allan MacEachen and Jamieson asking questions and wanting answers. We are going to show what an effective opposition is," he said.

Others coming out of the meeting were not smiling broadly.

Employment and Immigration Minister Bud Cullen said he is looking for a job; Sports Minister Iona Campagnolo, defeated in her British Columbia riding is now "putting her life back together"

Clark phones cabinet forty

JASPER, Alta. (CP) — Joe Clark is spending several hours on the telephone each day contacting Progressive Conservatives he hopes to name to a two-tiered cabinet containing a record 40 ministers.

Instead of summoning cabinet hopefuls to his Rocky Mountain retreat for final appraisal, Clark is using the phone to complete plans for taking control of the government June 4.

Within a week, Clark also plans to announce the key aides who will be appointed to the prime minister's office replacing the chief advisors of Pierre Trudeau, Bill Neville, Clark's chief of staff, told reporters Thursday.

Clark met Thursday with Michael Pitfield, clerk of the privy council and a close friend of Trudeau.

"I'm here to brief the prime minister-elect on the burden he'll have to carry," said Pitfield after arriving here with several suitcases of top-secret documents for Clark to read.

Neville said he hopes senior Ottawa mandarins like Pitfield will not "fool around" with files before the minority Conservative government takes office.

Clark's chief concerns as he meets advisers here until Sunday are to reorganize the traditional cabinet structure and plan a timetable leading up to his trip next month to an international economic conference in Tokyo.

"Clark is committed to a two-tiered cabinet structure," Neville said after Clark opened discussions with a five-man transition committee of prominent Tories and perused alternative proposals by three management consultants from the firm P. S. Ross Associates.

The cabinet Clark initially hopes will result from the discussions would contain about 12 to 18 senior ministers responsible for most policy making and more than 20 junior ministers. A similar type of cabinet operates in Quebec.

The only two Quebec Conservatives elected Tuesday — Heward Grafftey and Roch LaSalle — are both expected to be given junior posts.

Aiding him in choosing these Quebecers are Jean Bazin and Michel Cogger, two prominent Conservative party organizers from Quebec who sit on the transition committee.

The other committee members are James Balfour, a former Conservative MP from Regina; David Jenkins, a millionaire businessman from Edmonton, and Neville, the man who plans to replace Jim Coutts as principal secretary to the prime minister.

Neville said Clark wants to meet with the leaders of the other three federal parties before the government is sworn in.

"I expect the opposition parties will all want to give a new government a fair chance to present our programs to Parliament," Clark said Wednesday in Edmonton, rejecting the notion he must bargain with them to avoid defeat of his minority government.

Sanctuary isle for ex-leaders in South Seas?

CANBERRA (Reuter) — The United Nations is to discuss a suggestion that it take over an island where political leaders like the executed ex-leader of Pakistan, Zulikar Ali Bhutto, might live past changes of government.

The exile island is the idea of the director of the government-funded Australian Institute of Criminology, William Clifford, who has been told that the plan interests UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim.

Clifford outlined his proposal in a letter to the secretary-general earlier this year and he learned recently that the matter would be raised at next year's UN Congress on Crime which will be attended by delegates representing about 130 governments.

Under Clifford's plan, political leaders would live on an isolated island and contribute to the development of the area by farming and other means.

"The reason why the United Nations can be effective is that the governments usually are only interested in ensuring that political opponents do not stage a comeback. Therefore, execution is the most effective way of ensuring this," Clifford wrote.

The island would not be a traiditional prison, but rather a rustic vacation.

Clifford proposed that possibly every five years the political leader's case would be reviewed by his government with a view to the leader returning to his homeland.

"There are many people who would be otherwise sentenced to death, who would be grateful to have this kind of reprieve," Clifford said.

Clifford, for six years director of the UN crime prevention and criminal justice programs, said he first raised the question of exile for disgraced political leaders with senior UN officials during his period in New York from 1969 to 1975.

"We were impressed by the fact that up to that time, there had been a tacit but effective understanding in Latin American areas that when revolutions occurred there was sanctuary for the ousted officials in nearby countries," Clifford said.

"In other parts of the world, the change of government often accompanied by executions and even massacres."

British gasoline prices jumped

LONDON (Reuter) — The British government appealed for public conservation Thursday as two big oil companies announced a new increase in gasoline prices.

The Earl of Gowrie, deputy employment minister, said in the House of Lords: "I most strongly hope and urge that all consumers take action to reduce demand."

He said it would be a pity if the government had to use emergency powers to allocate fuel supplies.

Gasoline at many service stations is expected to cost about £0.79 ($1.90) a gallon today because of a £0.08 (19-cent) increase announced by British Petroleum and Burmah Oil. Other companies said they will follow suit.

Although British motorists have not been left without gasoline by the world oil shortage, the price has risen about 20 per cent since last October.

Lord Gowrie said a slight voluntary cut in demand would be enough to avoid any real problems.

Buyers screened for new Rolls'

LONDON (AP) — The builders of Britain's most luxurious cars are busy on plans to assemble 150 special Rolls-Royce Silver Shadows for which buyers will be carefully chosen — at $65,000 apiece.

The Silver Shadows will celebrate the 75th anniversary of the momentous meeting between the Hon. Charles Rolls — originally a London car dealer — and Henry Royce, a Manchester builder of electric cranes and dynamos. Their meeting led to the formation of the Rolls-Royce automobile and aero-engine empire.

The new cars are bound to become extremely valuable collectors' pieces, fetching in the years ahead much more than their initial price.

They will have badges in red, the color the company originally used for badges on their classically-styled radiators and elegant trunk lids instead of the black badges that have been a feature of all Rolls-Royce cars built since 1933, the year that Royce died.

It has been a widely believed legend that Rolls-Royce switched from red badges to black as a discreet mark of mourning for Royce but Miller Williams, spokesman for Rolls-Royce, said ompany records confirm that Royce approved the change a month or two before he died.

Changing the badges back to red may not sound a dramatic way of marking the anniversary, said Williams, "but to us in the company it is a major departure, some people call it revolutionary."

The company, which is publicly-owned as distinct from the now nationalized aero-engine section of the original Rolls-Royce empire, plans to sell 75 of the special Silver Shadow to buyers in the United States and elsewhere overseas and the other half to British buyers.

It is to prevent speculative buying of the cars for resale at inflated prices to some of the legion of Rolls-Royce fanatics that the company decided to offer them only to selected customers.

Williams explained that the cars will be sent to the company's usual dealers and it will be the responsibility of the dealers to allocate the Silver Shadows.

To combat what Williams branded as possible forgeries and plagiarism the anniversary models will have coded chassis numbers. Each car will also have a commemorative plaque in the glove compartment but just what the wording will be has yet to be decided.

Night's work worth $3.4M

PARIS (Reuter) — Thieves escaped with loot worth an estimated $3.4 million after spending the night ransacking a house owned by an Arab ambassador.

Police sources said that the loot for the three burglars included jewels, carpets, paintings and two cars — a Rolls-Royce and a Jaguar.

United flies after strike

BURLINGAME, Calif. (AP) — The 55-day strike against United Airlines, which cost the carrier an estimated $8 million a day, has ended with union approval of a new contract in time for the airline to cash in on some of the U.S. Memorial Day holiday rush.

The vote results, announced Thursday, represented overwhelming approval by a large, unspecified turnout of its 18,600 members, union officials said. However, they refused to disclose the exact vote.

Richard Thomas, assistant district chairman of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, said the first shift of mechanics will go back to work by midnight Sunday night or earlier.

United, confident of approval of the three-year agreement agreed to last Saturday, had said it planned to resume partial service on Monday — including flights to Hawaii, where the strike caused a big drop in tourism.

Based on United's gross earnings of $3 billion in sales last year, the longest strike in the airline's history cost more than $8 million a day in sales. Besides its U.S. flights, the airline also serves several Canadian centres.

The new contract calls for a 30-per-cent wage increase over three years, plus fringe benefits including cost-of-living increases. The average mechanic's hourly wage will go to $13 an hour from $10 by mid-1981.

United, hoping to regain passengers lost in the strike, had applied to the U.S. Civil Aeronautics Board for permission to offer a $108 one-way fare between the U.S. east and west coasts. That fare and a $125 night fare between San Francisco and New Jersey were approved Thursday.

In Chicago, meanwhile, the airline said passengers flying with United in the first 21 days after flights resumed will get coupons good for 50-per-cent discounts on future flights. The coupons could be used between July 1 and Dec. 15 anywhere within the continental U.S. and on round-trip flights originating in Hawaii.

Historic Iona islet saved for Britain

LONDON (WP) — Scotland's historic island of Iona, burial place of St. Columba and 60 ancient kings, was bought Thursday by Sir Hugh Fraser, a Scottish millionaire.

Fraser's family foundation agreed to pay just over $3 million for the 1,900-acre island off the western coast of Scotland and then give it to the government to preserve "for the nation its hallowed Abbey Church, ancient cemetery and tiny village."

Britain had been beset by rumors for months that the island might be bought by Americans or Arabs who would try to develop it as a tourist resort with hotels on its sandy beach and a golf course or two.

DINNER THEATRE COMES TO VICTORIA WITH AN EXCITING MUSICAL-COMEDY REVIEW COMING SOON!

Woodstock II turned down

LODI, N.Y. (UPI) — It's two down and "where next?" for Woodstock II, the anniversary rock concert that nobody seems to want.

The five-member town board of this Seneca County community rejected by a 4-1 vote Thursday night a proposal by promoter John Morris to bring Woodstock II here for a mid-August musical bash.

Last week, voters in the town of Meredith, Delaware County, turned down the rockfest by an 8 to 1 margin, apparently partly because of memories of the chaos of the original Woodstock in neighboring Sullivan County a decade ago.

Morris was not available immediately for comment on his future plans, although he has said previously that several spots in New York State are under consideration for the rock extravaganza.

Sentiment in this Seneca County community appeared equally divided as about 300 people packed the town hall when the board began its deliberations Thursday night.

Councilwoman Karel Titus moved to approve a resolution adopted earlier by the Seneca County Board of Supervisors prohibiting rock concerts in the county.

The motion carried 4-1 with Lodi Supervisor Francis Hurd joining the majority in rejecting the proposal. He said one of the reasons for his vote was because that earlier understandings with the promoters "had turned out not to be true."

Hurd said he had asked Morris for "$2 million up front," for the town, but that Morris had instead proposed to give the town $1.125 million based on 10 percent of the gate, "but nothing up front," Hurd said.

Seneca County law enforcement officials were sharply opposed to the festival, despite claims by Woodstock II promoters of ample security for the concert, scheduled for Aug. 14-17 with an anticipated audience of 300,000.

Hurd said promoters had told him they have "insurance against everything, including property damage." He said later, however, that they did not have the amount of insurasnce they claimed.

The concert is being planned to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the first Woodstock festival, which was held on the Max Yasgur farm in Bethel, a Sullivan County town in the Catskills. Traffic congestion, sanitary and medical problems and vandalism were rampant at that affair.

Peking goes on a movie-buying spree

HOLLYWOOD — A delegation from Peking is shopping in Hollywood for China's first legal purchases of American movies, and they're viewing everything from Patton to Singing in the Rain.

The delegation, led by Hong Zang, general director of the China Film Corp., spent 10 days being wined and dined by studio chiefs and viewing movies of every description.

The purchases would be the first ever made in Hollywood by representatives of the Chinese government, which came to power in 1948 and established diplomatic relations with the United States only this year.

The Chinese reportedly admitted having some 30-year-old American films but said they are not shown any longer because they lack the legal right to exhibit them.

They spent Thursday at 20th Century-Fox viewing Norma Rae, the tale of a woman union organizer battling the textile industry in a Southern town.

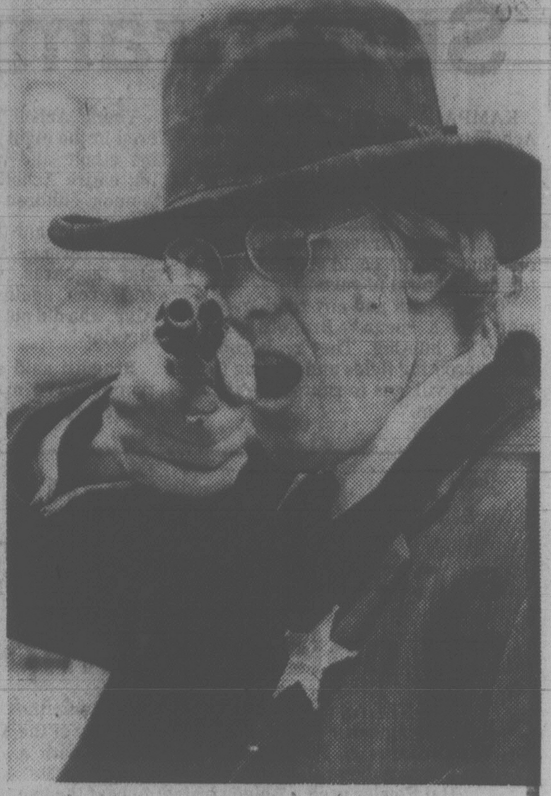
They have also seen Network, Singing in the Rain, Buck Rogers, The Blackboard Jungle, From Russia With Love, Cleopatra, and Patton, the story of the victorious U.S. general which was reportedly one of Richard Nixon's favorite films.

"They are not looking for political pictures but are interested in historical and socially significant films," said Beverly Austrian of Sino-American Export Co., who escorted the Chinese visitors from New York and Washington.

She said Hong and three companions showed great enthusiasm for many of the films.

The Chinese, who have not yet made any purchases, reportedly have a maximum budget of $10,000 per picture to buy films outright, as opposed to usual arrangement in which films are rented or leased. American studio chiefs are apparently willing to go along, hoping for Chinese approval to produce films on the mainland.

Also, American producers are looking forward to the day when the millions upon millions of Chinese moviegoers will open up a new and lucratie market.



DEAD AIM is taken by 23-year-old Steve Ford, youngest son of former U.S. president Gerald Ford who is making his movie-acting debut with a starring role in the western film Cattle Annie and Little Britches in which he plays a lawman.

A hospital birthday cake for Wayne

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — John Wayne, who embodied the American hero as an actor for so long that he is finally in line for a medal in real life, reaches his 72nd birthday Saturday, battling recurrent cancer and there will be at least one birthday cake in his suite at UCLA Medical Centre, hospital spokesman Al Hicks said Thursday.

Other than that, hospital officials and members of Wayne's family refused to discuss the birthday plans.

Wayne can look forward to presentation soon of a gold medal, already authorized by Congress and awaiting only the signature of President Jimmy Carter, who has said he approves.

The Senate, acting with unusual speed even for such a non-controversial measure approved the legislation by voice vote Wednesday, only hours after it passed the House.

Carter visited Wayne at the hospital earlier this month he told him "he has the love and affection and best wishes and prayers not only of all the people of our nation ... but of millions of people around the world."

"He's in good spirits and made some jokes," the president said. "He thanks everybody for loving him so much."

Wayne, who lost a lung to cancer 15 years ago and underwent open-heart surgery last year, underwent what was supposed to be a routine gall bladder removal in January. Surgeons found cancer and removed his entire stomach.

Complaining of abdominal pains, he returned to the hospital for more surgery May 2, and physicians told him that it was likely the cancer had spread throughout his body.

Wayne then volunteered for what doctors described as "strictly experimental" treatment, probably involving drugs and radiation, but hospital spokesmen said they wanted him to gain strength before beginning the program.

In his most recent film role, The Shootist, he ironically played an aging western gunfighter dying of cancer.

Spear rampage on Idi

KAMPALA (AP) — Spear-wielding Acholi tribesmen are hunting down and killing rival tribesmen who backed Ugandan dictator Idi Amin during his eight years of bloody purges, a U.S. missionary says.

Rev. Joseph Bragotti told reporters Thursday he could give no death toll in the spiral of revenge.

"On any path and any road, every man has a spear," Bragotti said. "They're hunting. They're burning huts, uprooting fields and waiting for people in villages to run out so they can get them."

Young Acholi men were slaughtered in the eight years Amin purged his ethnic and political foes, leaving entire Acholi villages with only women, children and old men.

Bragotti said the Acholis now are taking revenge against the Kakwas and Lugbaras, who backed Amin, and even against the Madhu and Alur, who did not directly support the dictator.

Bragotti said although Tanzanian troops have managed to impose order in Gulu the city is only "the hole in the doughnut" of revenge going on in the countryside.

Bragotti is a member of the Verona Fathers, an Italian Roman Catholic order active in Uganda for many years. He said the more than 40 missionaries in the Gulu area are safe.

Top kitty worth a cool $270,000 for poker champ

LAS VEGAS (AP) — What is believed to be the longest single day's play in the 10-year history of the World Series of Poker ended early today with a California public relations man raking in $270,000.

Hal Fowler used a 7-high straight to beat the two aces held by Bobby Hoff, ending a five-hour, head-to-head confrontation that saw the lead see-saw between the two men. There was $258,000 in the pot.

The game — Texas-style Hold 'Em — capped the 10th annual poker festival at Binion's Horseshoe Club in the brilliantly lit downtown Glitter Gulch. The final day's play lasted 13 hours.

Hold 'Em is a form of seven-card stud played in Texas and other parts of the U.S. southwest. Two cards are dealt face-down to a player, who also uses five community cards dealt face-up on the table to come up with the best five-card poker hand.

Fifty-four players had bought into the game Tuesday, each putting down $10,000. At the end of the first day's play, the field was narrowed to 35. Twenty-five others dropped out Wednesday, and Thursday's opening crowd of 10 was quickly narrowed to just five contestants by late Thursday afternoon.

Fowler, of Norwalk, Calif., was down to just $1,700 early in Thursday's play. But several pots of more than $100,000 raised him to first place over the 39-year-old Hoff, of Victoria, Texas.

Shortly after 1 a.m. Fowler took a $398,000 pot, beating Hoff's king-high straight with an ace-high straight.

Anti-Carter Tehran riots

TEHRAN (AP) — Demonstrators burned U.S. flags and effigies of President Jimmy Carter and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin outside the U.S. embassy today as tens of thousands of Iranians protested U.S. criticism of Iranian executions for the second consecutive day.

Parading with banners reading Down With Carter and Death To American Imperialism, about 80,000 marchers joined in protests in two Tehran squares and in front of the embassy. The state radio said "millions of people" marched in more than 15 major cities.

Grinning revolutionary guards protecting the embassy compound in Tehran helped hang an effigy of Uncle Sam from the embassy walls.

The effigy also carried the communist hammer-and-sickle symbol, Israel's Star of David and the British Union Jack, showing the demonstrators' belief that all these forces are guilty of interference in Iranian affairs.

Other effigies represented Carter and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin, whose likeness also was burned in front of the Palestine Liberation Organization headquarters.

The crowd at the embassy swelled with the arrival of youths in buses and trucks, and they jammed traffic around the block-long embassy grounds.

At one point, shoving matches erupted between leftist guerrillas and Islamic militants, who oppose Marxism. A van driven by the Moslems knocked down one of the guerrillas, and Moslem priests shook their fists at a guerrilla they said had planted a bomb under their bus.

Several hundred motorcyclists also arrived in an organized group, each carrying two or three passengers and portraits of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, Shiite Moslem leader of the Iranian revolution, and other ranking officials.

The crowd at the embassy chanted quotations from the Koran, the Moslem holy book, and one banner read: "Why didn't the U.S. Senate condemn the shah's kangaroo courts?"

About 100,000 demonstrators marched Thursday, but no violence was reported then.

California economy crunched by gas

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Californians used to think nothing of driving 10 miles to a pizza parlor or 400 miles for a weekend outing. But the gasoline shortage has changed all that, dealing a sharp blow to the state's economy.

"There is no doubt an impact," Joseph Wahed, chief economist for Wells Fargo bank, told UPI. "The economy was slowing down of its own accord anyway when the gasoline shortage came along. The gasoline shortage added a lot of slowdown in auto sales, hotel and motel activity, recreation vehicles, home sales in outlying areas."

Overall statistics are not yet available for the past month. But when they become available, there no doubt will be varying interpretations on how much of the slump — on car sales, for example — can be blamed on the gasoline shortage.

Hotel and motel occupancy is down in all resort areas. Disneyland and Magic Mountain are getting less traffic. The people who sell motor homes and big cars admit a sharp slump in sales. Parking lots in metropolitan area are down about 30 percent in occupancy.

Paradoxically, the places where gasoline is most available are hit the hardest, while hotels, rent-a-car agencies and other businesses in the areas of greatest shortage note a mild boom.

Wahed said three of California's top four industries — aerospace, electronics and farming — are not seriously affected by a gas shortage. The fourth major business, tourism, is bearing the brunt. The industry supports 450,000 jobs and accounts for more than $15 billion a year in receipts.

Stolen N-slab mailed to paper

LYON, France (AP) — An anti-nuclear group that claimed responsibility for stealing 14 radioactive slabs from a university has mailed one to a newspaper to demonstrate the ease with which nuclear material can be filched.

Police and firemen in protective clothing removed the slab from Le Progres newspaper's mailbox Thursday night and declared it was of "very feeble radioactive intensity," no stronger than a fluorescent light.

The head of civil defence in Lyon, France's second largest city, confirmed that 14 slabs — five of strontium, five of cesium, two of thallium and two of cobalt — were stolen from the physics department of Lyon University.

The civil defence chief, who asked not to be named, said all the stolen slabs were of very weak radioactivity, and that stronger material was kept in the university's vaults.

The Revolutionary Antinuclear Ecological Cell, which claimed responsibility for the incident, announced its formation a week ago with a threat of "pseudo-terrorism to alert the public to the ease with which nuclear material can be obtained."

The director of the physics faculty, Jean Delmau, said the slabs were stolen from a laboratory frequented daily by about 700 students.

He said the slabs would only be harmful if a person carried them for several months.

Bribes confession

TOKYO (Reuter) — Former Japanese defence minister Raizo Matsuno disclosed Thursday that he received between 400 and 500 million yen ($1.8-$2.3 million) in political donations from the Tokyo sales agent of the three biggest U.S. aircraft companies.

Matsuno, testifying before a parliamentary committee investigating alleged payments in connection with sales of U.S. military and civilian aircraft in Japan, said he received the money over a period of four or five years starting in 1967 from Nissho-Iwai Co., sales agent for McDonnell Douglas Corp., Grumman Corp., and Boeing Co.

The 62-year-old politician said the donations had nothing to do with the defence ministry's selection of McDonnell Douglas F-4E Phantom jets as its mainstay fighter in 1968.

The ministry is to acquire 140 Phantoms between 1971 and 1982.

Matsuno, a prominent member of the ruling Liberal Democratic Party and defence department chief from 1965 to 1966, said he spent the money on political activities.

Drink danger with Tylenol

NEW YORK (AP) — An overdose of a widely-used aspirin substitute may be more dangerous than has been suspected if taken with alcohol, a researcher said Thursday.

The warning comes from Dr. Craig McClain of Minneapolis Veterans Hospital and the University of Minnesota Medical Centre.

McClain and two colleagues reported to a meeting of the American Gastroenterological Association in New Orleans on the popular non-aspirin pain reliever acetaminophen.

Acetaminophen is used in dozens of over-the-counter drugs and is the active ingredient in Tylenol and Datril.

The medical director of McNeil Consumer Products Co. of Fort Washington, Pa., maker of Tylenol, said there was no evidence acetaminophen was toxic in recommended doses.

Dr. Thomas Gates, the medical director, said most cases of acetaminophen poisoning were suicide attempts with large doses.

"Somebody who has a cocktail at night and uses alcohol properly need not worry about interaction between the two drugs," said Dr. Ben Lanman, medical director of Bristol-Myers, maker of Datril.

public servants on the firing line.

As for the list of 500 people the Conservatives consider suitable candidates for senior public service appointments, spokesmen for the Privy Council Office and the Public Service Commission said there are not enough job opening for that many people.

A Privy Council spokesman said most heads of regulatory agencies or Crown corporations such as the CBC and Air Canada are appointed by the prime minister for a set term of seven years or longer.

A new government would be unlikely to fire any of them, the spokesman said, because "you could face a very nasty wrongful dismissal lawsuit."

Wholesale replacement of top mandarins has never been a tradition in Canada, although critics say that Trudeau made more political appointments than any prime minister before him.

Bryce Mackasey, former Liberal cabinet minister appointed chairman of the board of Air Canada, rejected speculation that the Conservatives will replace him.

"I think this speculation is unfair to the Conservatives," he said in a telephone interview from his Montreal office.

These are some of the people who are — rightly or wrongly — judged possible candidates for the Conservative hit list:

Gordon Robertson, Privy Council secretary for federal-provincial relations and a senior public servant since the late 1950s who served under the last Conservative government;

Ivan Head, once Trudeau's chief adviser on foreign affairs, now president of the International Development Corporation;

William Teron, Ottawa developer and head of Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. He has frequently come under Conservative criticism in the Commons;

Bernard Ostry, deputy minister of communications and his wife Sylvia Ostry, head of the Economic Council. Both are personal friends of Trudeau;

Ian Stewart, until recently economic adviser in the Privy Council office and recently-appointed deputy minister of energy, mines and resources.

It is deemed possible the Conservatives will move deputy finance minister Bill Hood, a career public servant in that department, to replace him with Robert de Cotret. Former chairman of the Conference Board in Canada, de Cotret was widely expected to become a Conservative economic minister before he was defeated in his Ottawa riding.

A spokesman for the Public Service Commission, meanwhile, denied newspaper stories that there had been a rush in the previous 48 hours to fill jobs before a Conservative government could carry out a pledge to cut 60,000 jobs through attrition.

"It's not a true story at all," the spokesman said. "There's been no perceivable change in requests to fill positions. In fact it's been slow for the last little while."

In any case, the spokesman said, it takes a minimum of eight to 12 weeks to fill a senior job.

In a related development, lower on the civil service totem, the Public Servce Commission has repudiated a confidential report which indicates 53,000 civil service positions could be easily eliminated through attrition.

The commission says the report is out of date and, in any case, was based on a false premise. A new report is being prepared.

The document, leaked to reporters by a source within the commission, comments on the feasibility of Progressive Conservatives pledges to whittle down the federal bureaucracy by 60,000 over the next three years.

It says it may be possible to chop 20,000 jobs in the first year, 19,000 in the second year and 14,000 in the third. The attrition rate now is about 30,000 a year and declining.

The report, however, was apparently based on the false premise that the Conservatives would cut the 60,000 public servants over three years by not replacing employees who died, retired or resigned.

Conservative spokesmen now say the cuts would be spread throughout almost the entire public sector, which includes Crown corporations and as many as 200,000 persons who are not public servants.

TOWN TALK

You can always tell an easterner by the frown on his face, according to a recent Newsweek article that names Victoria, Vancouver, Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles as the centres of optimism in North America.

The article, by Times of London correspondent Frank Vogl, says there is a belt of grumbling that stretches from Miami to Montreal.

"If you want to meet anxious people, then go to Montreal."

He adds that, by contrast: "In Vancouver the optimism is substantial and in Victoria it is just outrageous."

He attributes the western good humor to wide open spaces, better climate and the frontier spirit.

Vogl obviously has never been caught in a Douglas Street traffic jam on a hot afternoon.

Bob Wright's Oak Bay Marina Ltd. is distributing a color brochure these days to promote fly-in fishing trips to northern B.C. hot spots.

The sportsmen are flown to places like Hakai Pass and Rivers Inlet — famed for their big salmon — where they operate out of a comfortable 136-foot floating hotel, the M.V. Marabell.

From all accounts it's a trip of a lifetime for fishermen, because the salmon are both big and plentiful. But we have to wonder about one picture in the brochure that shows two lucky anglers posing with their catch — more than 50 salmon.

Seems to us that photo is either a little misleading, or those two fellas are a wee bit over their limit.

Federal Fisheries limits are clear — an angler can take no more than four a day and have a total possession of no more than eight fish.

The Victoria Day Parade was a dazzler for most but for veteran parade-goers there was something missing.

That was the white-shirted contingent from the Victoria Motorcyle Club which has led the parade since its inception.

Asked for an explanation, Jack Batey, long-time member of the club, said there were two reasons he and his fellow riders didn't make it this time.

First, the riders need lots of room to do their thing and space was at a premium with square-dancers and antique cars leading the parade.

Secondly, it was such a glorious day that many of the riders played hookey.

The nostalgia that the Good Times '79 No. 1077 steam engine brought Victorians as part of the holiday festivities last weekend also brought nightmares to residents near the E & N yards in Vic West.

The steam engine shunted around the yards into the wee hours of Tuesday morning, revelling at every opportunity to blast its whistle.

And then finally it headed up the island. But at each of the numerous crossings, the insensitive yahoo at the controls hauled down on the whistle cord with the wild abandon of a runaway freight on the CPR mainline.

Childhood memories of glistening black steam-driven rolling stock aside, Tuesday was a work day for most of the residents whistled from their sleep.

Victoria commissionaire Al Robins of 2780 Kingswood is a carpenter's son who has spent his life in the business world.

Now, at 56, he's sort of retired but too restless to take things easy.

So he's become an inventor, making use of his business background and carpenter heritage to put together a food-dispensing unit for peanuts and other similar products and hopes to go into mass production if he gets enough orders.

So far he's got about half a dozen of his handcrafted machines distributed in the city but hopes to increase the total to more than 1,000.

"I have always felt the creative urge but in England I was too busy as manager of a peanut factory to do this sort of thing."

He calls his creation the Robins Nest.

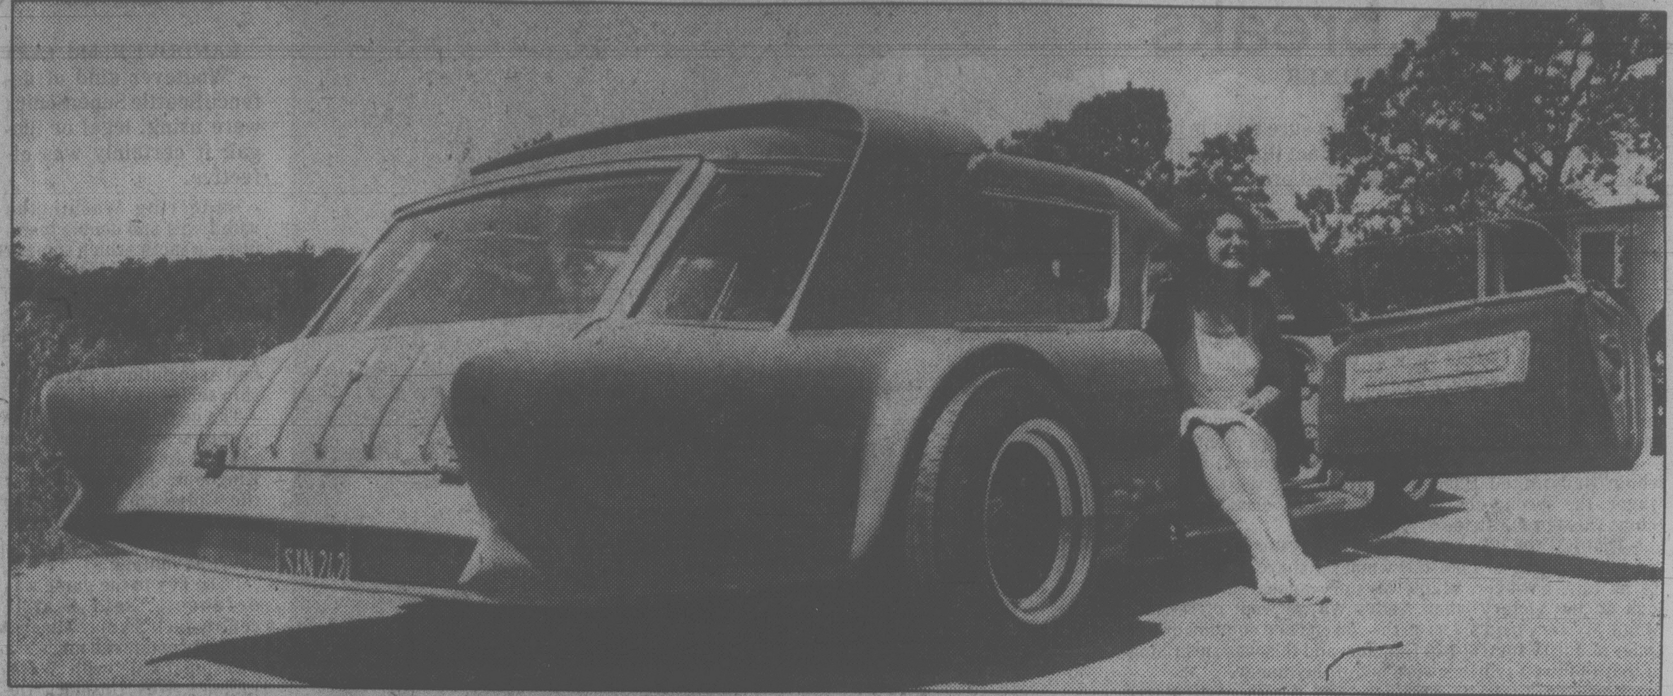
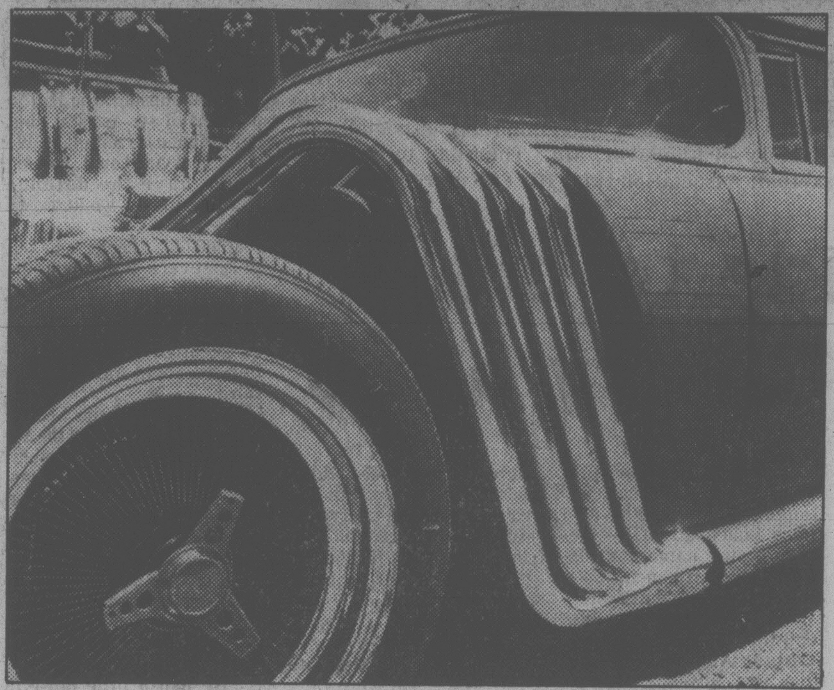
In marking the birthday of someone who has devoted a large part of her life to saving animals, it seems appropriate to offer greetings something along the lines of "Many Happy Tailwags."

It's especially apt in the case of Mother Cecilia Mary, who quietly celebrated her 90th birthday this week at the Good Shepherd Animal Shelter in Mill Bay.





SHE'S CHOPPED, CHANNELLED and even sectioned — in the lingo of the modified car crowd — and Karen Kristoffersen finds it all pretty radical. American kingpin still hunted after Tofino drug bust

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

Police are still uncertain about the number of persons who may have escaped when an anti-drug task force swooped down on smugglers unloading 35 tons of marijuana in Sydney Inlet north of Tofino Tuesday morning.

RCMP Superintendent T.M. Gardiner said today as many as three persons may be still hiding in dense bush.

They include an American whom Gardiner described as one of the principals in the smuggling operation.

"We have no way of knowing for sure how many got away," he said. "We are working in a bit of an unknown."

However, he said the name of the American has come up repeatedly during police interrogations of the 21 suspects now in custody.

"As far as we can tell he was supposed to be there," Gardiner said.

Twenty suspects were rounded up after the dawn raid. They appeared in provincial court on Wednesday and were remanded to next Monday for plea and election of trial method on charges of importing marijuana, possession of marijuana for the purposes of trafficking and conspiring to import marijuana between April 1 and May 23.

The 21st suspect, a 39-year-old Colombian man, was taken into police custody Thursday morning and is to appear in court.

The man was spotted by Ed Hanson and Henry Olhanik, employees of Greenwood Logging, as they were trolling for salmon in Sydney Inlet at about 9 p.m. Wednesday.

Tony Lee, a timekeeper and first aid man at Greenwood's camp at nearby Stewartson Inlet, said in an interview today the man stood on a rock about half a mile from where the drug bust took place and signalled to Hanson and Olhanik for help.

The two took the man to camp where Lee applied first aid.

"He was in pretty bad shape," Lee said. "I worked on him for four or five hours. He was obviously suffering from a bad case of hypothermia. His pulse was well below normal."

Lee said the man, who wore only a light jacket, had spent a day and a half in the bush by the shore.

"He watched the whole operation," Lee said. "He was terrified about what might happen to him if he was caught."

Lee said the man, who spoke only a little English, told him he flew up from Los Angeles last weekend to Seattle where he boarded the 16-metre pleasure cruiser Whitecap. He arrived in the inlet at about 10 p.m. and was dropped off on the shore.

Lee said the man was adamant no one else remained in the bush.

But police are continuing their search. The police vessel Harvison is on patrol in the inlet and at least one tracking dog team is working in the area.

Gardiner said that if there are others still in the bush, their chances of survival are remote.

"There's no shelter, no communications, no food, no clothing, no roads, and if they got in too deeply they are probably disoriented and completely lost," he said.

Meanwhile, RCMP have received instructions from Ottawa to destroy all the seized marijuana, except for samples as needed for court purposes.

Gardiner said he hopes to be able to use the municipal incinerator in North Cowichan, which was used to destroy a 13½-ton shipment seized by police in Tofino last July. A request will be made to North Cowichan council today to use the facility either Monday or more likely on Wednesday next week.

Monday huddle set for RJH, minister

Health Minister Bob McClelland will meet the executive committee of Royal Jubilee Hospital's board of directors on Monday to consider recommendations to improve the hospital's efficiency.

The recommendations are the result of a study made by a seven-man committee and unanimously endorsed by the board earlier this month.

Board chairman Terry Prentice said the hospital will seek financial assistance to appoint a project director and some project managers as a first step.

The study was called for by the minister with the hospital board and the B.C. Hospital Association co-operating.

G.K. Moreton was chairman of the joint management study. He, along with E.L. Richmond and Dr. L.E. Ranta, were BCHA represenatives. L.P. Phillips and W.F. Forrest of Woods, Gordon and Co. acted on behalf of the board while H.R. McGann and R.W. Foreman were appointed by the health ministry.

In a report to the board, Moreton said the lack of time allowed for the study — nine working days and two more to put the report together — had made it necessary to focus on the hospital's shortcomings "rather than on the many excellent features of its services and programs."

The committee notes that several events in the past 10 years have added to the hospital's problems. These include the acquisition of the Eric Martin Institute at short notice in 1969 and the integration of the Memorial Pavilion (the former Veterans Hospital) in 1974.

The report notes the introduction of the government's long-term care program in 1978 caused many of the hospital's acute-care beds to be lost to long-term patients.

It also points out the implementation of the systems house computer and related systems in 1977 had created "extreme pressures" on the hospital.

Some of the 68 recommendations made by the study committee include the upgrading of the current director of computer systems to director of information services, the immediate recruitment of a director of finance, the conversion of the computer system to BCHA computer systems and in-house manual systems and the development of a project plan for the phasing of recommendations and new systems resulting from the study.

Prentice said further studies will also have to be made in the hospital to provide basic data.

New attack planned on rowdies

A special committee will be formed by Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier in an effort to curb rowdy behavior and vandalism at beach parties.

Saanich police board, of which Couvelier is chairman, agreed to the action Thursday following the latest complaints from residents on the perennial problem.

Couvelier said today it's clear that solutions must be found, because the problem appears to be growing. Complaints from residents have already started flowing into his office, at least two months earlier than in previous years.

The mayor said among those he will want on the committee are parks and recreation officials and the Saanich fire chief, the latter because beach fire permits are required.

In the past this requirement has tended to be overlooked and the result has been to weaken police enforcement.

"But the police can act if they find a party in progress without a permit," he said.

Couvelier said the committee would probably try to identify those Saanich beaches where parties would be least offensive to residents of the area. Permits would be issued for fires on those specific beaches, in an effort to contain the problem.

But during Thursday's police board discussion Couvelier made it clear that he doesn't want a clean-sweep approach.

"It isn't a question of chasing them off the beaches, but just trying to contain them so that the parties don't get out of hand," he added.

Couvelier told Police Chief Bob Peterson he is not convinced police overtime is essential to tackle enforcement on the beaches. A reassigning of personnel might be the answer.

When the mayor commented that complaining residents seem to be under the impression that "the force is reluctant to respond" to rowdy parties involving scores of young people, Peterson said it's a question of manpower availability.

To disperse 100 "rowdies," he said, would require a crew of at least 10 or 12 officers.

"You have to have someone to guard the car to start with. A few years ago we had all the air let out of the tires on a police car. The vehicle was vandalized in other ways and put out of commission the rest of the night."

The chief also noted that enforcement is difficult because some parties start off relatively quietly but rapidly deteriorate.

Deputy police chief Rick Avison said waterfront residents frequently have their beach access steps and railings torn down to provide fuel for beach fires.

Commented board member Reg Midgley: "It's the big parties that are the problem . . . 13-year-old kids down there all stoned out of their minds."

Swiftsure contestant to rescue

A boat that will race in this weekend's Swiftsure sailing race came to the rescue of another sailboat late Thursday night.

A Pacific Rescue Co-ordination Centre spokesman said today the 44-foot Baya, with five adults and a child aboard, reported being in trouble off Trial Island about 11 p.m., having lost her auxiliary power.

The Deliverance, which will race under a Pacific Handicap Racing Fleet rating in Swiftsure, stood by and eventually towed the Baya, which is not competing in the big race, to the Inner Harbor.

Constable charged

Constable Grant Bottrell, a nine-year member of the force, will appear in provincial court next Thursday charged with two counts of assault causing bodily harm to David Dean Krenbrink.

One of the counts alleges Bottrell struck Krenbrink with a night stick, and the other that the officer kicked him.

Bottrell was bringing Krenbrink and another man, John Wolski, in to the station after a Sidney resident reported prowlers near his home earlier in the morning.

The pair appeared before Judge William Ostler in provincial court later in the day charged with prowling and loitering.

Following an internal RCMP investigation Bottrell was taken off general patrol duty and given an administrative job in the office.

By BILL WALKER
Times Staff

There is no such an animal as a sure thing in horse racing, and never better was that fact illustrated than Thursday night at the standardbred program at Sandown Harness Raceway.

Shoot The Works, a six-year old bay mare owned by Pat Lundy of Surrey and driven by Joe Hudon, went into the 10th race on the program as the winner of her last five, including her first start here last Saturday, and the prohibitive favorite at 1-3 on the board.

Shoot The Works came out of the race a badly beaten last as she broke stride right at the start of the race, fell far back and was never a factor.

Hudon was roundly booed by the crowd, many of whom perhaps had "shot the works" on what appeared to be a good thing and had been for the past two months.

If that wasn't bad enough for the punters, many of whom had linked Shoot The Works in their Exactor wager, the second choice, Andys Wayne, driven by Dave Sibiga, also broke stride.

That left the way open for Magic Mystery, a nine-year old black mare, to take the winner's share of the purse. To be fair, however, Magic Mystery appeared to have a lock on the victory when Andys Wayne went off stride. Magic Mystery paid $17.90 on the win end and combined with Quiet Majority for a $90.20 Exactor; and this was surprising in that the two favorites were out of the money.

However, that's racing luck. And it was particularly unfortunate for Hudon in that earlier on the card he was in the sulky for Bold Lobo, who also broke stride, finished last, and had broken stride in his first start here as well.

There was another shock in store for some punters in the second when the winner, Over Flo, driven by Jack Hodson, was put back to third for failure to lose ground on a break. However, it was noticeable at the time and the decision was readily accepted. Eagle Star was put up as the winner with Arts Choice taking second.

Dusty's Monarch, a seven-year old brown gelding owned by L. Forbes of Souris, Man., and driven by Keith Linton, took the featured one mile pace over Mitch's Butch and Brave Bullet. It was Linton's first win and, as the pundits were saying "won't be his last". Linton was the leading driver here last season and at the recently concluded Cloverdale meeting. Dustys Monarch returned $4.50, $3.70 and $3.10.

Master Charge, a five-year old brown gelding, who won his first start here Monday, proved to be money in the bank again as he repeated in the first and paid $2.50, $2.20 and $2.10.

The first three horses all paid the minimum $2.10 to show in what was a minus pool. Master Charge combined with Senga Queen Hope for a equally modest $7.20 Exactor, lowest of the meeting.

The best Exactor payoff came in the fifth when Dusty Day, in scoring his second win, combined with longshot Moko N, for a $192.90 return.

Attendance was 995 and the handle $75,056.

Racing resumes tonight at 5:30 p.m. and Saturday afternoon at 1:30.

Whites refuse to surrender

Coach Bob English figured he'd loaded the Blue side with the top talent available for Monday night's exhibition game against Bristol City of the English League's first division.

Trouble is, somebody forgot to tell the Whites they were destined to be the fall guys.

Whites hammered in three unanswered goals in the second half to record a convincing 4-1 victory.

In the second half, John Leier, Mark Robb and Les Malbon came through for the Whites.

Leier's goal came on a pass from Dan Henry at 49 minutes, Robb followed suit 13 minutes later with a 20-yard drive into the lower corner and Malbon completed the upset with a 35-yard curving shot that eluded Blue netminder Ted Van Waes.

Following the match, English named the side to face Bristol City. which defeated Seattle Sounders 1-0 earlier this week and face Vancouver Whitecaps on Saturday in Empire Stadium before coming to Victoria.

SERIOUSNESS of playoffs is reflected in faces as Washington Bullets' Wes Unseld (41) reaches to block shot by equally-determined Paul Silas of Seattle SuperSonics. Seattle wound up with edge in determination, especially on defence, and scored 92-82 victory in Landover, Md., Thursday to deadlock best-of-seven National Basketball Association final 1-1. Attitude to brass costs Cherry a job

BOSTON (AP) — Boston Bruins coach Don Cherry, bench boss of the so-called workingman's hockey team, is jobless after a feud with his National Hockey League bosses over whether he should answer to players or the front office.

Cherry's close personal ties with the athletes, and his refusal to act like the brass, caused the split, as the Bruins announced Thursday the coach won't sign a new contract.

Both sides claimed money wasn't the deciding issue.

Bruins president Paul Mooney said at a news conference the team would have raised the financial ante, but added that "philosophical differences" with Cherry made it useless. The coach was released from his contract that would have expired July 31.

"They thought I was too close to the players," said Cherry from his home. "They thought I wasn't management enough. And it's true. But that's how I won.

"But I've had a lot of different jobs in hockey and anyone who bounces around the minor leagues like I have — well, it makes you tough . . . You don't change your approach."

The split was made final during a meeting Thursday between Cherry, Mooney and general manager Harry Sinden. The Bruins said they will mull over a replacement. Cherry denied he has lined up another job.

But he added: "The best coach in the NHL naturally wants to keep coaching, and they should be standing in line for me."

Cherry came to Boston in June, 1974, after winning honors with Rochester Americans in the American Hockey League. The so-called Lunchpail AC — the coach's own name for his Bruins team of non-stars — made two trips to the Stanley Cup finals and two to the semi-finals. Boston won four straight Adams Division titles and this season was eliminated by champion Montreal Canadiens in a seven-game semi-final series.

The candid coach lately claimed he was underpaid at $60,000 per season, but the Bruins responded Cherry received nearly $30,000 more in fringes and playoff money.

"Don Cherry was a considerable personality," said Mooney, bracing for backlash from fans. "But nothing can continue indefinitely."

Cherry had predicted during the playoffs that he wouldn't be back. He argued bitterly with Sinden through the news media.

Villeneuve's ride impresses Stewart

The 27-year-old Canadian set the fastest opening practice time for Sunday's annual racing classic in this community. Just for good measure, Jody Scheckter of South Africa slotted his Italian-built car into second place.

Villeneuve's performance around the narrow, twisting climbs and descents of Monaco left three-time world champion Jackie Stewart of Scotland proclaiming — "This young man has just got to win the title before long."

"Villeneuve's performance was simply more proof of his phenomenal natural talent," said Stewart, now retired but still one of the most respected voives in Formula One. "I am not at all surprised that he was faster than all the other drivers."

Villeneuve was timed at one minute 26.91 seconds (137.139 kilometres an hour) and Scheckter at 1:27.35 over the 3.32-kilometre (2.058-mile) curcuit. Their times provisionally put them on the front row of the starting grid.

Overtaking is a rare occurence at Monaco, so the pair's rivals now have to conjure up something specal in the second and final practice session on Saturday.

Ferrari's impact at Monaco began in 1974 when Austrian Niki Lauda earned them the pole position, only to lose the race to the late Ronnie Peterson of Sweden who was driving for Lotus.

Sonics' defence had the answer

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — Whatever kind of defence Seattle SuperSonics were using, legal or illegal, it certainly was effective.

Badgering Washington with traps and double teaming — a tactic which some of the Bullets said merely masked an illegal zone — the SuperSonics took a 92-82 victory Thursday night and evened the National Basketball Association's championship series at 1-1.

The next two games of the best-of-seven series will be played in Seattle, at the Kingdome on Sunday and at the Coliseum on Tuesday night, with the SuperSonics now claiming the home-court advantage.

"The key to the game was defence," said Seattle centre Jack Sikma, who had 14 points and 13 rebounds in a bruising battle with Washington's Wes Unseld. "Defence is the start of our offensive game."

"We're not a great shooting team," said guard Dennis Johnson, who had 20 points and six assists, "but our defence is first-class. We work very hard on it. As long as we have the defence working for us, we know we can win."

Johnson's theory was put to a severe test when the SuperSonics, after leading 46-33 midway through the second quarter, missed 14 consecutive shots and fell behind 56-49 early in the third.

At this point, the Seattle defence stiffened and the SuperSonics ran off 11 straight points for a 60-56 lead. During that stretch, Washington missed five shots, had two blocked, and lost possession once on a steal.

Gus Williams scored four of his game-high 23 points during the streak, Sikma had four and John Johnson three of his 17.

"We had a little lapse in the second quarter," said John Johnson. "We've got to make them give up the ball. When Elvin Hayes or Bobby Dandridge hold the ball for 15 seconds, it's like a surgeon getting ready to operate."

Washington's two high scorers were blanked over the final 10 minutes, however, and the Bullets shot only 38 per cent in the second half. Dandridge finished with 21 after going 3-for-11 in the second half and Hayes had 20.

"We didn't function well against their zone defence," said Washington coach Dick Motta. "We are going to have to regroup and sharpen up against their zone if we are going to win this series."

Hayes also talked about the zone, but Dandridge took a different view.

"It wasn't an illegal zone like Atlanta and New Jersey use," Dandridge said. "It was just double teaming."

Seattle coach Lenny Wilkens said of the zone talk: "I hate to hear that. It's a terrible thing to say. We trap and double-team, but we don't play a zone."

Canadians draw blank in Thomas Cup action

JAKARTA (Reuter) — Japan virtually clinched a semi-final berth in the Thomas Cup men's international badminton team competition Thursday by winning the first four matches of its quarter-final round against Canada without dropping a game.

The Japanese need only one more victory in the remaining five matches tonight to qualify to meet Indonesia, the defending champion, in the semi-finals Monday and Tuesday.

Japanese national champion Kinji Zeniya won the opening match 15-10, 15-6 over Pat Tryon of Montreal and Canadian national champion John Czich of Ottawa lost the second match 15-7, 15-11 to Masao Tsuchida.

In doubles play, Mikio Ozaki and Toshiro Tsuji defeated Ian Johnson of Montreal and Bob McDougall of Calgary 15-8, 15-8 and Tsuchida and Yoshida Iino downed Paul Johnson of Montreal and David de Belle of Toronto 5-4, 15-9.

Light-hitting Kiko provides Orioles' sting

By The Associated Press

Kiko Garcia isn't known for his hitting ability, but give him an inch and he's liable to take just enough of a mile to smack the baseball into Baltimore Orioles' bullpen.

Garcia, who previously had hit only four major league home runs, hit a two-run homer in the sixth inning Thursday to give the Orioles a 5-3 victory over Boston Red Sox and a 2½-game lead in the battle for first place in the American League East.

"I don't hit that many so when I hit one, it's a complete surprise to me because I try to hit everything on a line," Garcia said. "I just happened to get the ball up."

Boston threatened to rally in the ninth when Carl Yastrzemski, who had three hits in four trips for Boston, singled to open the inning. Butch Hobson struck out and George Scott flied to centre. But Dwight Evans singled to left to put runners on first and second with two out.

Oriole pitcher Dennis Martinez, who claimed his seventh straight victory against two losses, got pinch hitter Carlton Fisk, who was coming off the 21-day disabled list, to ground to third where Rich Dauer made a diving stop to throw him out and preserve the victory.

"I was just trying to get them out," Martinez said. "I was throwing good. I wasn't really worried in the ninth. I just threw the ball hard on the outside corner. My fastball and slider were both working good, so I didn't want to take a chance with hanging a curveball."

In the only other American League games, Kansas City Royals nipped Seattle Mariners 5-4, Milwaukee Brewers downed California Angels 9-6 and Chicago White Sox crushed Oakland A's 10-1.

In the only National League games, San Francisco defeated Cincinnati 2-1 and New York Mets split a doubleheader with Chicago Cubs, the Cubs winning the first 9-7 and the Mets taking the nightcap 4-2.

Orioles' manager Earl Weaver said Martinez is "a hell of a competitor. He wants to finish games and he's going to finish a lot of games in this league."

Boston took an early 3-0 lead but Rich Dauer delivered a two-run single in the Baltimore fifth and Gary Roenicke drove in the tying run with a sacrifice fly an inning later. Garcia then cracked his second home run of the season.

Weaver said one of reason Martinez seems to fall behind early in the game is that he has a problem "getting use to the mound and settling down into the strike zone. Once he gets into the groove, he's tough to beat."

When asked if he felt Martinez was one of the best pitchers in the league, Weaver simply said: "He's got seven wins and that should answer your question."

Dennis Leonard was breezing along with a 4-1 lead until Seattle tied it in the top of the eighth on Willie Horton's two-run homer and Bruce Bochte's RBI double. Kansas City game back to push across the winning run in the eight.

TIMES TOURNAMENT DEADLINE SATURDAY AT 5

It's the final call

By MAX LOW
Times Staff

Okay you last-minute deciders, this is it.

This is the last chance — from now until 5 p.m. Saturday — to get your entry in for the sixth annual Victoria Times Public Parks Tennis Tournament.

Although entries which are handed in must reach the Times newsroom by 5 p.m. Saturday, we will accept any mailed either Friday or Saturday as long as they arrive by next Tuesday.

The draw will be made out on Tuesday by a committee made up of representatives of the Times and the Vancouver Island Tennis Association (VITA) and then postcards will be sent out to one person of each pair drawn.

The postcards will give the opponent's name and phone number and it's up to you to call and arrange your own playing time. The card then must be filled in (with the winner's name and the score) and returned to the Times. The same routine is followed each round until the semi-finals, which will be played along with the finals of all five events on our windup weekend Aug. 18 and 19 at Oak Bay's Henderson Park courts.

Although it is basically a summer-long tourney, you don't have to be available to play every day to qualify. We can work matches around your vacations (providing you're not going to be away four or five weeks at a time). If that's what's holding you back, don't worry. Get that entry in.

Entries are not as high this year and the total is unlikely to match last summer's record of 255. Once again, the women and girls are laging. We could do with quite a few more names in both of those singles events and, in fact, if we don't get a flood in the last day we may be forced (as we were last year) to combine the two.

Following the finals on Aug. 19, trophies will be presented to the winners and runners-up in all five events and for the first time this year, all winners also will receive a new racquet courtesy of Centre Court Racquets in the Stadacona Centre on Pandora.

Salmon fishermen finding better luck

At Becher Bay, Ray Campbell topped the catch around southern Vancouver Island this week with a 37-pounder landed Wednesday off Beechey Head with a minnow. On the same day, Rick Smith boated 29 and eight pounders off the Head and Jim Puckett landed a 26-pounder off Bedford Island.

Aldridge Point is also producing and most success was noted on strip, anchovies and green and white hootchies fished with around 80 feet of line and two pounds of weight.

Butch Bouchard, a visitor from Mackenzie, headed up the fishing list at Pedder Bay with a 36½-pounder taken Thursday morning in Race Pass on an anchovy. It took him 45 minutes to land the lunker. Glen Cedar took a 32¾-pounder Monday on strip off Christopher Point, which has been the top producer. Strip, anchovies and Silver Harvest Octopus providing the best catches at depths down to 150 feet.

A few fishermen are landing chinooks to 21½ pounds off Oak Bay while fishing on the Flats. Some large ling and rock cod have also been weighed in.

One exception to the rule has been Sidney, where action was described as quiet.

Deep Cove waters have yielded numerous limit catches of chinooks to 14 pounds along with a few blues off Moses and Hatch points. Krippled-Ks fished about 140 feet in depth have produced best.

Fair returns of chinooks to 16 pounds and a few blues were landed in the middle part of Saanich Inlet around Indian Bay and Bamberton by fishermen trolling minnows, anchovies, Krippled-Ks or hootchies.

Action has picked up in Finlayson Arm with chinooks to 21 pounds coming in from deep waters on Squirts and hootchies.

Further up-Island, Bold Bluff, Sansum Narrows and Porlier Pass waters are still yielding some good chinook catches on the afternoon tide.

Porlier certainly can't be overlooked after Dave Unwin's experience earlier this week. The Lansdowne teacher and soccer booster had one of the most exciting 45 minutes of his life.

Mooching with a homemade lure made to resemble a needlefish, the action started out when Unwin brought in a 35 pound cod. Next cast, another bump. It proved to be a 22 pound chinook. A few minutes later he brought in a 25-pounder and then landed a 16-pounder. How about 98 pounds in 45 minutes?

Fishermen at Northwest Bay are enjoying some excellent returns of bluebacks to three pounds on green and white or yellow and white flashtails. Chinook to nine pounds are still around off Nanaimo and Northwest Bay, but heavy gear is needed to get down to about 200 feet.

A few chinooks to 32½ pounds have been landed near Village Island in Barclay Sound but fishing, in general, has been quiet.

Blues to four pounds are showing off Hornby, Denman and Lasqueti islands with the odd chinook to 17 pounds turning up off Bates Beach.

Other excellent catches of blues have been landed off Campbell River near the Cape Mudge Lighthouse, the Red Can buoy, Mitlenatch Island and Rebecca Spit. They've been feeding on tiny needlefish right on the surface, so small Tom Macks, Henry Smiths or red hootchies are working best.

Trout anglers are enjoying ever-better returns as the warm weather brings on a variety of insect hatches and the accent has turned from bait to fly fishing in a number of lakes and streams.

Some of the best catches in the past week were taken in Bear, Cowichan, First, Second, Panther, Great Central, Dixon and Sproat lakes as well as in the head pond of the John Hart Dam at Campbell River.

Newest Radiator throws off steam

Brad MacBride made quite a debut Thursday night in the Victoria Senior Amateur Baseball League at Lambrick Park.

MacBride went the distance to claim the pitching victory as Capital Radiators tripped Quadra Warehouse 7-3 and helped his own cause at the plate by knocking in two runs.

Other support came from Dwain Pack, who smashed a double, a single and a sacrifice fly to drive in three runs.

Nanaimo just misses

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — Mario Govorchin scored the winning goal late in the third period and a Nanaimo rally fell short as New Westminster Salmonbellies edged the Timbermen 14-13 in a Western Lacrosse Association game Thursday night.

The Salmonbellies held a 9-5 lead in the second period before Nanaimo scored three goals in 15 seconds to close the gap. The score remained close until Govorchin scored to make it 14-11. Timbermen scored two late goals, the last with 13 seconds remaining, but couldn't get the equalizer.

Wayne Goss, Norm Leuszler, Bill Mosdell, Ivan Tuura and Steve d'Easum each scored twice for the winners, while Len Ciminelli, Bob Tasker and Ken Brown added singles.

Nanaimo outshot New Westminster 57-50.

AROUND OUR SHORES

Among the thousands of sailors aboard Swiftsure and Juan de Fuca boats gathered in the Inner Harbor this evening is Derek Wright, who is well-known to those of us who read his articles in Pacific Yachting.

Derek will again be racing in Swiftsure aboard the Copelands' 33-foot Bagheera from Vancouver.

While well-known in racing circles, Derek's name will probably soon be just as familiar with those who prefer leisurely cruising to tough offshore racing through his Wright's Yacht Log, which has recently been published by Gray's Publishing Ltd. of Sidney.

The term "yacht" is a give-away that he grew up in Britain where it is customary to call a boat a yacht, whatever its size. North Americans, even if their boats rival the Oriole in length, tend to reject the term yacht, except when their craft officially becomes one in racing terminology when she's in competition.

Derek, who served his time in the British merchant marine, has come up with a log that has a lot going for it. First of all, it has a waterproof cover. Also, on the front of the cover is portrayed a set of signal flags, the notations under some of them being applicable to sailboat racing.

His section for equipment specifications is also good although I might argue that antifouling doesn't really come under equipment but should be treated as a regular maintenance item — but that's a moot point.

The working section of the log is realistic. By not being divided into a 24-hour page per day layout it can be used economically.

The log has a wealth of information in it and is a great improvement on most I've seen. But with all this meticulous detail, Derek forgets to warn users that entries should be made in pencil, not ink that can be obliterated when the book gets wet.

While the Canoe Bay Sailing Club will have some of its keenest sailors taking part in Swiftsure and Juan de Fuca this weekend other club members will have a mini classic of their own. This is the club's annual 30-mile International Boundary Race, which gets under way at 9 a.m. Saturday in the vicinity of the government wharf at Sidney.

The club members are hoping for better winds than the light airs in the recent 14-mile Sidney Island race which allowed only seven boats to finish within the time allowance.

Larry Mofford's Main Brace was the overall winner, being followed by Bob Bentham's Dystocia, Jim Morris's Madeleine, Russ Searle's Skidbladnir, Don Manness' Whisper, Don Wilson's Menehune and Holger Brix's Caliente.

Also at Sidney on Saturday, it will be best bib and tucker time for members of the Capital City Yacht Club. It's a tradition with the club to hold its annual sailpast on the Swiftsure weekend. This year the salute will be taken by commodore Dave Cooper.

Sidney was the starting point on Sunday for the first annual Sea Chest Catalina 27 Trophy Race: Jack Trueman's L'Chaim of the Royal Victoria Yacht Club won the trophy and was first boat over-all racing with spinnakers. Placing next after her were Ron Jewula's Beowulf, Gordon Cooper's Toybox, Bob Van Den Driessche's Noosa and Bill Sargent's Southern Comfort.

Like RVYC, the Esquimalt Squadron, Canadian Forces Sailing Association, will have no racing for keel boats during the Swiftsure weekend but the squadrom's dinghy sailors will have series racing on Sunday. Things get under way at 1 p.m. in Esquimalt Harbor.

Members of the Victoria Canoe Club are hoping for a sortie on the Cowichan River on Sunday providing there is enough water. If not a mystery trip will be arranged.

Stan Luzzi is in charge of this outing and members should be leaving the Helmcken Road parking area at 10 a.m. Further details can be had by phoning Stan at 478-7262.

Savard, Tony O, Unger head free agents parade

TORONTO (CP) — The Globe and Mail says at least 75 National Hockey League players become free agents June 1, including Chicago Black Hawks' goaltender Tony Esposito, Montreal Canadiens' defenceman Serge Savard and forward Gary Unger of St. Louis Blues.

Other notable players on a list of those who will have played out their options or had their contracts expire include Pittsburgh Penuins' centre Gregg Sheppard, Vancouver Canucks' winger Ron Sedlbauer and Detroit Red Wings' defenceman Reed Larson.

Under conditions of the reserve clause in the existing agreement, a team signing a free agent must compensate a team from which the player left, usually with one or more players. If clubs cannnot agree on fair and equitable compensation, the matter goes to binding arbtration.

In a controversial decision last year, the league's arbitrator, Judge Ed Houston of Toronto, awarded Dale McCourt to Los Angeles Kings when the Red Wings signed free agent goalie Rogie Vachon. McCourt contested the ruling in United States District Court in Michigan and won. But earlier this week, a U.S. appeals court upheld the player reserve clause and ruled that McCourt's playing rights revert to the Kings.

Bill Waters, agent for eight NHL players, said most of the players, "unless they are of superstar potential, are in for a rough ride on the free agent merry-go-round.

"No one is going to sign a free agent if they fear getting burned in arbitration."

Boston Bruins: John Wensink, Giles Gilbert.

Los Angeles Kings: Mike Murphy, Danny Grant, Garry Simmons Russ Walker, Steven Clippingdale, Pete Stemkowski.

Montreal Canadiens: Serge Savard, Dave Elenbaas.

New York Islanders: Dave Salvian, Ralph Stewart; Neil Nicolson, Andre LePage, Ed Pizunski.

New York Rangers: Bobby Shehan, Mike Korney, John Bednarski, Greg Hickey, Brad Becker.

Pittsburgh Penguins: Gregg Sheppard, John Flesch, Tom Cassidy, Bob Paradise, Brian Spencer.

Philadelphia Flyers: No players.

Double-play stymies Elks

Tally-Ho came up with a double play at just the right moment Thursday night to edge Elks-Athletics 2-1 in an eight-inning Stuffy McGinnis Men's Softball League game at Central Park.

Kevin Gilbert had driven in pitcher Lorne Bowden, who had singled, for the what proved to be the winning run in the top of the extra inning.

But in the bottom of the frame, it began to look as if a rally was in the offing.

That set the stage for the double-out effort. Glen Wallis hit the ball to third-baseman Dave Hayes, who stepped on the bag for a force-out and then whipped the ball to catcher Paul Kraeling to nab Carolan. Hayes then threw the next batter, Lou Vermette, out at first to end the game.

Bowden went the distance to earn the victory, allowing only four hits, while Kraeling supplied the other run with a solo homer in the second inning.

At Heywood Avenue Park, Mear's Realty edged Athletics 5-4 in a Heywood Men's League game that lasted 11 innings.

The score was knotted 3-3 in the regulation seven innings. Athletics managed three runs in the top of the 11th but Mears could only reply with two in the bottom of the frame.

Jim Miller led A's at bat with three singles in five trips to the plate.

In Victoria Senior Women's League play, Stockers North Americans blanked Bemister's Welding 3-0 and Strathcona Stingers edged Butler Brothers 6-5 at Hyacinth Park.

Cathy Hawley earned the victory for Stockers by pitching a three-hitter and Crystal Lockyer scored the winning run on an error in the top of the first. Lee Wallace went two-for-three and Gail Prince hit a triple to spark the Stocker batters. Jan Nowell was two-for-three for Bemisters.

Donna Urlacher came on in relief during the third inning to collect the pitching win for Stingers, giving up only three runs on six hits. Marg Busby scored the winning run in the bottom of the seventh and Karen Cowles helped out with a two-run triple in the sixth.

In Macdonald Men's League play at Macdonald Park, Saints topped Mayfair Insurance 6-3 and James Bay Inn hammered Esquimalt Rebels, 16-6.

Ernie McNabb pitched the win for Saints.

Cricketers name exhibition sides

Officials of the Victoria and District Cricket Association today named the two sides which will clash in the annual President's-Vice-President's fixture Saturday at Beacon Hill park.

Mal Shanks is captain of the President's XI. Others named were Elvin Carter, Tom Hayes, David Barnicot, Alex Porter, Dennis Shaw, David Billingham, David Gladders, Michael Nation, Michael Vaughan and Dennis Metcalfe.

Match time is 1 p.m.

Denat accepted at Michigan Tech

A surprise for sitter

DUBLIN, Ohio (AP) — It hardly seemed like the time for Mike McCullough to muster a 70, his best round ever over Muirfield Village's monsterous 7,101 yards.

The 34-year-old Ohioan did not hit a single practice shot. Instead, he had to take care of his four-year-old son, Jason. And he had laryngitis.

"I had to make sure he was up and about," McCullough said. "We're traveling alone this week. If I couldn't arrange a babysitter with my brother, I was going to withdraw."

McCullough, twice Ohio high school runner-up and 1970 Ohio amateur champion, was the most surprised person in his opening round performance Thursday in the Memorial golf tournament. He was just one shot behind Lanny Wadkins.

Jim Nelford of Burnaby shot an opening-round 73 and was in a large group tied for eighth that included Jack Nicklaus, Hale Irwin, Tom Watson and Don January.

"I didn't expect anything from myself since I hadn't warmed up," he said. "No one can come back on tour and be abreast of his game. I sure didn't expect this," said McCullough.

The opening round conditions — wind, cold and rain — did give McCullough a clue he might do well.

"My best tournaments have been on good golf courses in wind," he said.

Bombers sign three

WINNIPEG (CP) — Three import middle linebackers have signed with Winnipeg Blue Bombers of the Western Football Conference.

Frank Babb, Rod Wood and William Fisher are aiming for the spot opened when Harry Walters was traded to Hamilton Tiger-Cats.

All three are college football products: Babb from North Texas State, Wood from Brigham Young, and Fisher from Kansas State.

A calm before the storm

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — An uncomfortable calm settled over the Indianapolis Motor Speedway today, with one court case set to begin and the threat of other lawsuits clouding Sunday's Indianapolis 500 auto race.

The surprising offer by the United States Auto Club to reopen qualifications for 11 cars bumped during time trials last weekend was cancelled Thursday when two members refused to sign a waiver to increase the size of the 33-car starting field.

USAC heard protests or appeals of rejected protests from several of the barred racing teams Thursday night. The appeals committee listened for four hours, then deliberated nearly two hours before announcing it hadn't reached a decision. Members said they would resume later today but set no time.

No one appeared to believe the earlier rulings would be overturned, that was expected to be merely a formality to exhaust administrative remedies and clear the way for court action.

The one case already on the docket of the Marion County superior court was to go to hearing today before Judge Michael Dugan. Car owner Wayne Woodward was asking that his disqualified car be reinstated to the lineup by USAC or that the $1 million race be halted.

The judge has ordered the 33 qualifying drivers, including Cliff Hucul of Prince George, to bring their tailpipes of their cars to determine whether they illegally narrowed the exhaust openings to get more power.

Celtics, Bird, $200,000 apart

BOSTON (AP) — Boston Celtics and Larry Bird still are some $200,000 apart in their stalemated contract talks. The Celtics drafted Bird as a junior a year ago, and they have until the National Basketball Association draft June 25 to sign him, or he goes into the 1979 draft pool.

Benefits detected in bad knee, rain

CORNING, N.Y. (AP) — Susan O'Connor is a 30-year-old Californian who has not made much of a mark on the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour since turning pro five years ago.

She has not won a tournament and her best finish this year was a tie for 30th place in the Sahara National.

But Thursday, she was the only golfer to break par on the tough, rain-soaked, 6,203-yard Corning golf club course. She held a one-stroke lead entering today's second round of the $100,000 Corning golf tournament.

One reason O'Connor cited for her improved play was a sore knee that, she said, improved her swing. She also said the rain helped her game.

A birdie on the 18th enabled O'Connor to finish with a one-under-par 69, one stroke ahead of rookie Cathy Sherk of Port Colborne, Ont..

O'Connor, who injured her knee three weeks ago, said the soreness has made her use her shoulders more while swinging the golf club.

Jocelyne Bourassa of Shawinigan, Que., shot a 75 and Dale Shaw of Victoria had a 77.

Fugitive guilty in store holdup

Nine men and three women deliberated 6½ hours after a two-day trial arising from the theft of $104 from storekeeper Gat Cheung who said two men came into his store about 3:15 p.m.

The Crown alleged one man went to the rear for a knife and the other approached the counter near where Cheung sat and told his daughter at the cash register: "Let's not play games. The guy in the back has a knife. Give me all your money."

Cheung went to the till and passed money to the man who had demanded it, court was told. The other man then approached the cash register and according to Cheung's son who was assisting at the counter, he had a knife in his belt.

When both men were leaving the store at 811 Craigflower, Cheung cried out he had been robbed and the men fled along Dominion Road where they were stopped by two passing servicemen.

The accused later walked away but was arrested by police who searched a nearby apartment and found him lying behind a bed.

Evidence showed Lowe's fingerprint was found on a cardboard sheath in which the knife had been displayed in the store. The sheath was found on the floor of the grocery.

Crown counsel Malcolm Macaulay said it was not necessary for the accused to have brandished or held out the knife to commit robbery with an offensive weapon.

But defence counsel Douglas Christie said there was no link or communication between the man who took the money and the accused, and that the jury was being asked to speculate to fill in the gaps. He said the accused ran off because he was a fugitive, an escaper, who did not want to be involved when the storekeeper started a hue and cry.

Judge Leslie Cashman adjourned Lowe to June 26 at 10 a.m. for sentence, to take place at the same time as sentence is imposed upon the other participant against whom proceedings had already taken place.

Lowe was granted compassionate release on $1,000 bail to enable him to be with his ailing father pending sentence.

Wedge in sock a weapon

A heavy steel wood-splitting wedge knotted into a sock was judged to be a concealed weapon in county court Thursday.

Gaeton Loiselle, a 42-year-old boat repairman and crabber on the Victoria waterfront, was accused of possessing a weapon for the purpose of endangering the public peace, and of carrying a concealed weapon, and pleaded not guilty to both before Judge M.L.T. Drake.

Drake dismissed the first count but found Loiselle guilty of the second on grounds that the wedge could have been used as a weapon.

The accused was found lying among bushes about six feet off the sidewalk in front of 611 Courtney at 10:30 p.m. Aug. 24, 1978. Constables Martin Staples and Ronald Brown said he was intoxicated, and when they searched him found the wedge in a rear pocket.

They said they asked what it was for and Loiselle told them it was to defend himself in case he was attacked.

In court the accused said he had found the wedge and intended using it in making crab traps and to weight a trap on the harbor bottom.

Kahl loses again in land dispute

Former Esquimalt Socred MLA Lyle Kahl has been turned down for the second time in a B.C. Supreme Court bid to upset an administrative ruling against subdividing his Oak Bay property.

Mr. Justice Howard Callaghan dismissed the application Thursday without costs after a chambers hearing Wednesday.

A similar application was refused last year by a Supreme Court justice, but Kahl's subsequent application was based on a change in status of the 120-foot lot on St. Patrick.

Oak Bay approving officer Geoffrey White, municipal engineer, denied the application to subdivide the property into two lots because it would interfere with amenities in the neighborhood.

Residents want the numerous Garry oak trees on the property to remain.

Kahl proposed cutting some trees down on his own property. When the application was refused, two trees were cut down, altering the status and resulting in the second court appearance.

Before the judge

One of three men charged with drug trafficking received a one-month jail term Thursday in provincial court.

Jean Joseph Guy Joyal, 34, of no fixed address, pleaded guilty to two counts of trafficking in marijuana.

Crown counsel Gordon Macdonald told Judge Harold Alder the two incidents took place May 10 and May 14 and both times Joyal sold a quarter-ounce of marijuana to an undercover policeman for $20.

Joyal said he tried for welfare and unemployment insurance benefits and was refused.

Also charged with two counts of trafficking in marijuana was 23-year-old Stewart Ian Triplett, 2839 Ronald. Charles Edward Deloume, 26, of 1204 Yates, was charged with trafficking in hashish. Both were remanded in custody for possible bail hearings.

A 19-year-old James Bay woman who referred to herself as Robin Hood was given three days in jail for stealing items from the James Bay Safeway, 475 Simcoe.

When caught by city police a short distance away, Mulligan said, she had no money or identification on her. She also told officers she couldn't understand why she couldn't steal because she gave to the poor, referring to herself as Robin Hood.

Duty legal aid lawyer Vincent Giles said the woman and her common-law husband are on welfare and are living in low-incoming housing accommodations.

Fined $400 each for drinking-driving offences were: David Gary Freer, 18, of 4181 Bremerton; David George Rees, 24, of 2833 Quadra, and Jeffrey Arnold Watts, 37, of Surrey.

In addition, Watts was fined $200 for refusing a breath test demand.

Burrow's chiffon doesn't conceal body

Designers in New York as diverse as clients

By BERNADINE MORRIS

New York's fashion designers are no homogenous group. They're as diversified as the women they clothe throughout the country, with roots in the past and tendrils extending into the future. Three who presented their fall and winter collections last week indicate the range that encompasses the American look.

Stephen Burrows is notable for bringing the exuberance of black fashion attitudes into the white consciousness. A pair of red gloves to match red shoulder patches on a tweed suit is a touch that indicates his irreverence. Widly colored and inventively conceived, his clothes often bear little relationship to what is going on elsewhere in fashion. Burrows is a force unto himself.

Pauline Trigere is equally individual, but her work emerges from the long tradition of French dressmaking. She has adapted the intricacies of the Paris couture to the exigencies of American ready-to-wear clothes, retaining much of the mystery and glamour.

John Anthony is a totally New York product, attending the schools here and learning his trade among the pragmatists of Seventh Avenue. In his own collections, he brings a mastery of tailoring techniques and his own point of view to clothes.

The Burrows clothes range from satin boxing trunks, presumably for the athletically inclined, to exceedingly sexy and attractive evening dresses, often supported by straps on only one shoulder. He is a master of the chiffon dress that manages somehow to cover the body without concealing it one bit.

One of his specialties is the dress that is made of different bands of color, which come together with the impact of an abstract painting. He has several examples for fall, including one that combines blue, pink and purple satin in horizontal layers.

The shades do not have to be offbeat. By tossing a bright red coat over a white shirt and black pants, he creates one of the simplest yet most dynamic outfits of the current round of showings.

It's a rare designer who can function as well in the realm of tailored clothes as in glamorous evening styles, and the woman who understands tailoring is even more unusual. Pauline Trigere is one of these rarities. Her coats, capes and pants are the equal of her fantasy-touched evening dresses shimmering with glitter.

It was the second collection of tailored coats she showed for fall. The first consists of styles that will cost from $270 to $450 in the stores. The second includes styles that run to four figures each, but, as she observed, they include a lot of handwork.

For economy's sake, she is careful to include at least two dresses that work exceedingly well with each coat, and she is likely to add a skirt and a pair of pants as well. Practical woman, that Trigere.

Another practical notion up there in the land of rarefied prices is the cape or coat that's completely reversible. Every woman needs one of these when she's traveling, the designer said as she served as her own commentator. A plaid cape reversed to a gray wool jersey and, lo, there was a matching jersey dress underneath. For those who can handle such things, there is also a jersey jumpsuit.

The coat-cape scheme reappears for evening, often in floor lengths, because the designer happens to feel this is a nice way to make an entrance. Typically, a blue mohair cape, reversing to beige, shelters a gold-shot silk dress. Other dresses cast a silvery glow while still others rustle in taffeta.

John Anthony this season is busily consolidating advances in tailoring techniques he has been working out for the past year or so. These are all in the direction of simplicity of cut. The minimal art of tailoring, it could be called. This doesn't negate shapeliness, as his suits are curved to follow the figure in an awesome manner. Shoulders are broad, skirts knee length and narrow, and a diet of carrot sticks is recommended for the wearer.

All his coats, whether fitted or loose, are seven-eighths length.

Wine myths born out

ANAHEIM, Calif. (UPI) — A pharmacy professor says scientific experimentation with wine over the past 30 years has strengthened the validity of many ancient medical claims made about it. Steven Strauss, an associate professor from Long Island University's pharmacy college, says the clinical uses of wine declined because of prohibition and competition with new drugs. "Wine lacked the dramatic quality of the claims made for the increasing number of new drugs," Strauss said in a paper presented at the recent convention in Anaheim of the American Pharmaceutical Association.

Diets: Too many gimmicks

What's in Store
Joan Watson

There are two reasons to lose weight: health and vanity. While some of us might be prodded into dieting for medical reasons, most Canadians bite the bullet and start trying to lose pounds because last year's summer wardrobe doesn't seem to fit.

Being overweight certainly costs money. We buy clothes when we gain and it's human nature to splurge on new fashions when we lose. Getting on a weight reduction program costs money if we turn to appetite depressants, diuretics, laxatives, liquid protein diets, weight loss clubs and gyms and, because half of all Canadians are overweight, the market for reduction aids of one form or another is enormous.

The government of Quebec became so concerned about the amount of money spent by consumers on reducing methods that their department of consumer affairs has conducted an extensive study of all products on the market in drug and health studios and obesity clinics. The government concluded that dieting and clinic treatments were the only two real solutions to obesity.

The first point made by the study is that we are excessively concerned about a few extra pounds because of the trim, firm figures idealized by movies, advertising, television and magazines. But whether your concern is pure vanity or not, the conclusion seems to be we spend too much money on gimmicks that result in small, temporary weight losses.

According to the survey, the average weight loss attributable to the use of slimming products and plans is under five pounds and was maintained for less than two months by the vast majority of respondents. That's a dismal thought when you consider, Canadians, mostly women, spend millions of dollars a year trying to reduce.

More than 30 weight loss products sold in pharmacies, health food stores, grocery stores and department stores were divided into three basic groups. There were complete plans of formulated foods designed to replace meals. There were products designed to be used with a diet sheet included in the package and finally there were dietary supplements: some designed to hasten weight loss and others that fell in the category of vitamin and mineral supplements.

In all of these products the active ingredients fell into five main groups: bulking agents, anesthetics, diuretics, laxatives, and vitamins and minerals.

The Quebec study concluded that if bulking agents, anesthetics or diuretics help in dieting, they would have to be administered in much higher doses than those recommended on the products. But they would then inevitably be inadvisable or even dangerous consumed in that amount. The study concludes: "These products are irrational from a therapeutic standpoint."

As for laxatives, "they contain irritants that lower assimilation of nutritive substances". (Your body doesn't get full benefit of the food you do consume.)

As for the vitamin supplements, they wouldn't be necessary if your diet is well-balanced and those supplements represented as dieting aids cost from six to eight times the price of regular multiple vitamin tablets.

Liquid protein was considered separately. It's used as a protein supplement during a total or partial fast.

The conclusion of the report is tough: "For all these reasons, slimming products and plans are illogical and inadvisable."

It seems that will power is still the best aid to dieting and consumers who spend money on pills, cookies, candies, shakes and other diet products would be better off saving their money.

Don't let cycle tour run you down

Youth on the Move

By LUCY IZON

You don't need to be a super athlete to enjoy an inexpensive cycle tour. What you need is a dependable bike, good health and a realistic understanding of how much you can handle.

One of the worst mistakes you can make is to start your trip cold turkey. If you haven't ridden much in the recent past and you start off trying to cover 30 or 40 miles a day, you won't keep that pace for long. Remember, you're going to be using muscles that haven't had a chance to build up. Spend the few weeks before you leave doing some riding each day — give your body a break.

If your bike isn't the proper size for you you're going to wind up with a pain in the neck and some other important strategic places. To begin with, your handlebars shouldn't be any higher than the saddle. When you straddle the bike with your feet on the ground, you should have an inch or less clearance from the cross bar. When you sit on the seat you should be able to extend your leg straight down and have your heel rest on the foot peddle.

The clothes you wear can also make a big difference in your comfort. Cut-off jeans look great, but if you get caught in the rain they take ages to dry and the seams and denim can really give your skin a rubbing. You're better off to invest a few dollars in some loose fitting cycle shorts.

Packing is also a problem area. The more you try to take, the more you're going to have to push those peddles. Take what you plan to carry, put it on a table and divide in half. And throw in some detergent.

If you're purchasing a new bike, look for advice from local cycle touring associations. You don't need to spend a fortune, you need a bike that's mechanically sound and fits you properly.

There are two ways to go touring, solo or with an organized group. If you're going solo you can get some help with maps for planning your routes from local tourist offices. The problem is, although you know where the roads are, it's very hard to know what condition they're in.

Your best bet again is to contact a local touring association and see if they can tell you where you can get some good route advice. They probably have contact with a touring group in the area you want to visit, or members that have visited the area before. If you're having problems locating a local tour group, call the cycle dealers in your area.

If you want to travel with a group, here are some organizations that can help you. In Canada almost every province has a touring association. They organize trips from single day tours to several weeks. If you contact the Ontario Cycling Association, thay can tell you who to get in touch with in the province you want to travel in. You can write to them at 559 Jarvis St., Toronto, Ont., M4Y 2J1.

Here's an idea of what's available, the Ontario Cycling Association will be organizing a two-week tour which starts in Toronto, travels through the Kawarthas and Rideau Lakes to Ottawa, then through the Madawaska Valleys to Haliburton, the shores of Lake Simcoe before returning to Toronto 700 miles later. The cost for this particular tour is $85 with special family rates available. That fee includes reserved campsites and maps. The start date is July 15.

If you're cycling in Ontario at the end of June, you'll have lots of company. The Great Canadian Bicycle Rally will be held in Woodstock, Ontario June 30 through July 2. It's an annual gathering of bicycle clans from all over Canada, North America and Europe. There will be three days of tours, races, exhibitions and displays. For more information on how to reserve a campsite ahead, contact the Ontario Cycling Association.

The AYH (American Youth Hostels Association) have trips for beginners and experienced cyclists, but even the least strenuous trips average 35 miles a day and encounter some hills. Some are specifically for youth and others are geared to adults.

One of their most popular tours is a 30-day cycling trip through New England. The tour departs from Springfield, Mass., includes a 10-day visit to Cape Cod and winds up in Boston. The $405 (U.S.) fee includes accommodation in youth hostels, meals, personal and health insurance and all pre-arranged activities scheduled within the trip such as rafting, canoeing and back packing. You do have to provide your own bike and transportation to Springfield and from Boston.

This year the AYH will also be arranging tours to the Hawaiian Islands, 38 days, $998 (U.S.) departing from San Francisco. And a C&O canal trip which departs and ends in Washington, D.C. and spends 15 days touring Maryland, West Virginia and covers more than 75 miles of the Potomac River. Total cost $250 (U.S.)

For more information on trips organized by the AYH in North America and abroad write American Youth Hostels Inc., National Campus, Delaplane, Virginia 22025.

Don't let a beauty shop's low-priced permanent wave tempt you until you've asked: What type of curl will I get? Does the price include haircut? Are there conditioners in the solution? How long will the curl last? And don't let the beautician start the perm until you've told her if you take any medicine or color your hair. One mistake could take months of damaged-hair repair.

If you are certain some items you want to sell are quite old, find an antique dealer who specializes in what you have to sell—crystal, china, primitives, silver or whatever. Such dealers often have steady customers who rely on them to add to their collections. Ask for a value for each item rather than for one lump sum so you will know whether or not you want to part with certain pieces at the quoted prices.

Young readers' questions on human relations and sex are answered by a panel of experts: Saul Levine, psychiatrist; Marion Powell, medical doctor; Graham Cotter, clergyman; and Bruce Vichert, social worker. DEAR MR. VICHERT: I am a 14-year-old girl who can't get along with her father. Everything I do upsets him. We constantly argue. I always end up grounded. He says no without reasons. Both of us are very temperamental. I've tried running away but I'm too young. I've tried drinking. There seems to be no way out until I turn 16 but I'm afraid I'll do something very stupid in the meantime.

ANSWER: It is difficult when two temperamental people get together to try to solve problems. When it involves a parent and a child, the parent usually can "win" if for no other reason than he or she has authority. To win by using one's authority isn't the best way and sometimes understanding, concern, and caring are lost in the process. But this can be true from the child's point of view also.

The child may want to win just because he wants to have his own way and is unwilling to listen or try to see the parent's point of view.

Try and tackle things from a different angle. If fighting with your father doesn't solve anything, it seems pointless to continue. Why not change your approach? Why not try for a time to do your best to get along with your father. It may mean giving up for awhile some of the things you want to do.

However, if you "win" in getting along with him, then you may be able to have his trust, and you could agree to rules that would make life happier for youself.

DEAR DR. COTTER: I am 13 years old and have a problem with my brother. He acts like my dad by spanking, slapping, hitting and punching me. I hate it. My mom says it's just a stage he's going through — but for almost a year? I just ignored it at first and let myself get kicked around, but now I fight back.

He's begun to use me as a servant. If I fight back I get a slap across the face. I can't tell my parents, because when they go out I'd really be done for. Besides, they wouldn't listen to me anyway because to them he's a genius with top grades likes As, and I'm a C or sometimes a B.

ANSWER: Your parents should be aware of what your brother is doing to you. I noice that you say he behaves "like my dad, spanking, slapping, etc." That, I suppose, is where he gets the example, but it seems that your father and mother do not have any consistent way of maintaining discipline.

The fact that he does well at school should not make them think his behavior will be acceptable.You are up against naked aggression, and you must either get intervention from your parents, or the police, or teach him a lesson he will never forget.

DR. VICHERT: I am a 15-year-old girl and I have been very depressed lately. I have a girlfriend and we've been friends for a long time. We hang around with a little group of girls and guys. Lately I have started liking this guy in Grade 12 and we are now going out. I feel I am neglecting my friends though and my mom thinks so too. My friend and I have already discussed it and we couldn't work anything out. What should I do?

Should I give up my boyfriend or stay with him and gradually move away from my friends? I've tried giving equal time to my friends and boyfriend but there just isn't enough time. I have also tried getting both groups to know each other but they just don't mix.

ANSWER: Though your problem is a difficult one, it is not uncommon. One of the natural things of life seems to be that one moves from a group to a single partner, then the couple forms mutual friends. It is not unusual that you would have a group of friends, then find someone that you like particularly and want to spend time with him. This can't help but take time away from your group of friends.

This same experience will probably happen to all your friends in the group, I would hope that they understand that your having a boyfriend does not mean that you don't like them, but that you have found a special person at this time.

Feelings for a boyfriend and feelings for a group of friends are different and I would hope that everyone involved will understand and accept the differences.

They're hot on the scent

NEW YORK (Reuter) — American men are expected to spend $445 million this year — about $70 for each adult male — to make themselves smell nice, says fashion designer John Weitz.

Sales of men's fragrances soared from $67 million in 1963 to $395 million in 1978 and another $50-million increase is projected for 1979, says Weitz, a Hall of Fame member of the International Best Dressed List.

70 years of solid community achievement

As it moves toward a 70th anniversary, the Women's Canadian Club of Victoria looks back on a record of achievement in which it takes considerable pride.

That record includes work on the home front in both world wars, continuing interest in education, a waste-prevention campaign, the sponsoring of an early book about pioneer women of Vancouver Island and the bringing of outstanding men and women to Victoria as speakers and special guests at club luncheons and afternoon meetings.

Look in its visitors' books and you find the signatures of royalty, heads of state, people in public life, the arts and in academic field.

It was on June 28, 1909, that a group of Victoria women gathered to form a Canadian Club.

A.E. McPhillips, later to be a judge of the Appeal Court, addressed that gathering on the national and social advantages that such an organization would enjoy in helping to build Canada and give it a strong place in the Empire.

Mrs. G.H. Bernard was elected first president; Mrs. F. B. Pemberton and Mrs. Henry Croft, vice-presidents; Mrs. Charles Wilson and Miss Bell Leeming, secretaries and Mrs. Arthur Robertson, treasurer.

Others on the executive were Mrs. G. Fitzgibbon, Mrs. Richard McBride, Mrs. F.I. Clarke, Mrs. J.T. Reid, Mrs. Cecelia Spofford, Mrs. Alfred Watt, Mrs. Lewis Hall and Miss Mara. There were 61 charter members.

Almost immediately the new club sponsored a luncheon in honor of Agnes Deans Cameron, Victoria teacher, author, traveller and lecturer, who had attained fame by travelling to the mouth of the Mackenzie River.

Mrs. W.N. CHATER

Mrs. G.H. BARNARD

Membership grew quickly, attaining a peak by 1928 of 1,433 members and keeping well above the 1,000 mark for many years.

Today it remains fairly steady between 400 and 500.

During the Second World War the club raised money for a mobile canteen that was presented to the YWCA for Canadian soldiers overseas.

At home, in the anxious days that followed the Pearl Harbour disaster, the Women's Canadian Club of Victoria was given the task of collecting, cleaning, packing and placing at strategic points throughout the city and suburbs clothing that could be used in the event of a bombing raid.

The club raised a returned soldiers' fund of $10,000 during the First World War, from which temporary loans were made to returned men pending the period of rehabilitation and pension adjustments.

An avenue of maple trees leading to the front entrance of Victoria High School was a gift of the Women's Canadian Club as a memorial to students who went overseas and to commemorate the Battle of Ypres.

Through a continuing interest in educational work, two bursaries of $150 have been presented annually to the boy and girl matriculating with record marks in high schools of Greater Victoria and who are planning to continue their education.

Over the years the club helped establish a maternity wing in Royal Jubilee Hospital, furnished a semi-private ward in a new wing of that hospital and contributed to the Solarium for Crippled Children and to the YWCA.

For instance, Arthur Lismer, member of the Group of Seven, sketched in a realistic totem back in 1922 and captioned it A Touch of Springtime, Victoria in March.

"Edward P" stands alone on a page near the front of that book. It was written when the late Duke of Windsor visited Victoria as Prince of Wales.

Emily Carr, Kate Aitken, Bruce McKelvie, Nellie McClung, Helen Gregory MacGill, Mary Ellen Smith, Charlotte Whitton, Arthur Benjamin, Bruce Hutchison, Stuart Keate, are there along with high commissioners and other leaders in every phase of Canadian life and from other places around the world.

Prominent in the present visitors' book is the name of still another member of the royal family — His Royal Highness Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh. It was placed there Oct. 27, 1969.

Today, the Women's Canadian Club of Victoria continues to maintain its proud record, the current president, Mrs. W. N. Chater says.

dear abby

DEAR ABBY: I am a widow, 79. I live in the same apartment building with a very fine gentlemen. We've become very good friends. He is married but has a legal separation from his wife. She won't consent to a divorce unless he gives her a very large settlement, which he doesn't want to do as he figures he may outlive her. (She's 82 and he's 83.)

I am not entirely at ease with this man since I am afraid his wife might sue me, and I have a pretty nice savings account. She's very clever and I have heard that she still watches him like a hawk.

He takes me out to dinner, and I have him in for meals. We play a little cards, watch a little TV and when it comes to romance, he is unbelievable! I think you get the picture, but I'm not looking for trouble — just companionship.

BEA

DEAR BEA: Ask your lawyer how much "companionship" the law allows a man in your neighbor's circumstances. I think I get the picture, but if you aren't careful, you could get the frame.

DEAR ABBY: I've been married less than a year and already realize it's not going to last.

My problem is what to do with all the lovely wedding gifts. Our silver isn't even tarnished yet, but the cash has been spent!

I feel guilty keeping the presents, knowing that this marriage was a mistake from the start. Now all we need is the courage to tell our family and friends.

Is it proper to return the gifts? How about the cash?

IT'S OVER

DEAR OVER: According to The New Emily Post's Etiquette by Elizabeth Post (1975):

"Once the wedding has taken place, gifts are not returned, no matter how short the marriage. Strictly speaking, the presents belong to the wife, but the usual procedure is for the husband to keep those items that came from his own family and friends, and those particularly meaningful or useful to him, while his wife keeps the others."

Good food means good kids

By CAROL KRUCOFF
Washington Post

His face is one any mother would love for her child's pediatrician: a combination of Walter Cronkite, John Lindsay and Marcus Welby.

Dr. Lendon Smith, better known as "The Children's Doctor" for his TV show and book by that name, is trading on his wise and witty celebrity image to teach parents that "youngsters act what they eat."

Although medical school taught the pediatrician "that Americans were the best-fed people on earth and that only quacks used nutrition in the treatment of disease," he began to link diet with behavior after noticing that a majority of hyperactive children he treated ate "gallons of ice cream" and other sugar-charged foods. Often their mothers were plump and their fathers loved a "seven-course dinner: a six-pack and a piece of pie."

A proper diet, eliminating sugar and white flour, will calm most hyperactive children, says Smith, who prescribes drugs only as a last resort.

"If school authorities want to stop discipline problems and vandalism in the classroom, they must do away with sugar and junk foods in the halls and close the candy stores within two miles of the school," he says.

He claims that 75 per cent of people in prison today were hyperactive as children and that drug addiction is a small step from chocolate, coffee or cola addiction.

"You've got to assume a lot of kids act antisocial because they feel rotten. "If kids don't feel good, and have headaches from eating junk food, they may put shoe polish in their veins or do anything to make themselves feel better."

"The Prevention Diet" is Smith's name for eating habits he believes everyone should follow as a lifetime program for good health.

His advice:

—Avoid the "anti-nutrients:" white and brown sugar, corn and cane syrup, maple syrup, molasses and honey, commercial ice cream, boxed cereal and white flour.

—Shun as many commercial products as possible, especially those that are stabilized, emulsified, added to and processed.

—Eat natural foods four to six times a day in small amounts. Eat meals off a small plate, a coffee saucer for children or a bread plate for adults.

—Start your child's day with a breakfast of oatmeal, whole-grain bread with old-fashioned (unsweetened) peanut butter, lentil soup or stew, foods whose calories are absorbed slowly.

—Pack a lunchbox with an avocado and sprout sandwich, raw vegetables or Smith's own favorite sandwich: peanut butter and cheese on whole wheat bread.

—Stock raw vegetables in the refrigerator and stuff kids' pockets with raisins and nuts so they can nibble nutritious food when they get hungry. Nibbling on protein foods and complex carbohydrates (i.e., vegetables), according to Smith, keeps the blood sugar from dropping into the range in which quick sugar is craved. "If family members nibble all day by the time they sit down to supper their blood sugar will allow for a pleasant social interchange, instead of the usual snarls and elbowing that accompany feeding time at the zoo."

"Read your kids." For example, Smith says, acne or white spots in the nails could signal a zinc deficiency, inability to get out of bed in the morning or a poor sense of humor a lack of B vitamins, rhythmical tension-relieving action (such as foot-tapping or rocking) a low calcium level, and reading problems insufficient "memory vitamin," or B6.

Fatigue is a warning your body needs rest

Every time I have a cold, even a simple one, I'm left with a terrible sense of fatigue. It takes me a few weeks to get back on my feet. My husband, and even my children, seem to have the feeling that I'm stalling because it lasts so long. They seem to bounce back so much more rapidly than I do. Could there be some deficiency in my system? — Mrs. H.B.

Dear Mrs. B.:

Fatigue is an important warning mechanism that serves as a protection against unusual physical and emotional threats. Fatigue actually is the cry of the body for added rest.

Exhaustion and devitalization are not unusual following a cold, influenza or other infections anywhere in the body.

Doctors have been aware for a long time that unusual fatigue can follow a surgical procedure, especially one that has been done under general anesthesia. Patients afflicted with such fatigue often find that it is far more distressing than the disease or the operation from which they have recovered. It is unfair for anyone to assume that you are "stalling" when you fail to recover your normal energy level.

During an active infection there is a marked depletion of protein. This plays an important role in the post-infectious period. It has been my personal observation that many people try to get back to their arduous routines somewhat prematurely. This lack of respect for the body's need for rest actually can prolong convalescence and the period of incapacitation.

The likelihood is that you are not deficient in any particular substance, yet it would be wise to review with your doctor your dietary intake, your supplemental vitamins and minerals. There is, of course, always the possibility of having a lowered blood sugar level or a protein deficit. Studies of the thyroid gland might reveal some reason for your unusual fatigue.

Never to be overlooked as causes of fatigue are loneliness, boredom, domestic worries and emotional frustration, as there is a distinct relationship between the emotions and the physical capacity to function.

I dread the spring and summer because of all my allergies. The anti-allergy pills help me, but they make me so sleepy that I can't function. I also notice that I have trouble urinating when I take them. What can I do about this? — Mr. T.E.

Dear Mr. E.:

Coupon clippers save $50 a year

TORONTO (CP) — Manufacturers distributed a record 1.58 billion cents-off coupons across Canada in 1978, an increase of 13 per cent over 1977, says Gordon Finlay, vice-president of the clearing house division of A. C. Nielson Co. of Canada Ltd.

The increase results from more manufacturers using coupons to promote new products and more companies offering coupons, he said. The volume of coupons redeemed by consumers remained fairly steady at 7.5 per cent in 1978. Finlay also said the average Canadian can save more than $50 a year by using coupons.

Discos are destroyed, but Iranians feel freer

By WILLIAM BRANIGIN

TEHRAN (WP) — A picture of a scantily clad go-go girl leaps out of the ad in a 1978 guide for visitors.

"Tehran's most sensational and exotic nightclub," the ad proclaims, "brings you into the gay world of Paris. Dance till dawn to the fabulous Pino de Martis band."

Today there is no dancing till dawn in the nightclubs and discotheques of Tehran. All have long since been burned down or closed.

There are no more scantily clad women, even on beaches along the Caspian Sea. Under the recently proclaimed Islamic republic, beaches now are segregated by sex.

In fact, gone are most of the things advertised in the old brochure, from the operas and ballets at Roudaki Hall to Scotch whisky, which can be bought only at $70 a bottle on the black market now.

These are some of the features of the new Iran that might not appeal to foreign visitors and rich, Westernized Iranians. But for the average citizen, it hardly matters. Most of those Western diversions were financially out of reach anyway.

What counts for most Iranians one talks to is a sense of liberation after the regime of Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi was swept away two months ago. They do not seem terribly worried about the country's economic problems and the rather undemocratic outlook of the new powers that be. Life, at least for now, is freer than it used to be, and few people long for the old days.

The new sense of freedom is evident when one walks through the streets of Tehran. Knots of people gather around the latest wallposters. In some places the posters, which espouse varied points of view, spark impromptu sidewalk debates.

All kinds of literature are available at sidewalk stalls, from Islamic works to Marxist mainfestos, from portraits of the Ayatollah Khomeini to pictures of Che Guevara.

Foreigners seldom are harassed on the streets of the capital now as they were during the struggle against the shah. After the evacuation of thousands of foreigners in recent months, the general feeling seems to be that if one is still here, somehow one must be all right.

Even the inherent ugliness of Tehran — an architectural nightmare and city-planning disaster of hodgepodge buildings, prefabricated overpasses and traffic-congested streets — seems easier to take these spring days. Tree-lined avenues camouflage the motley facades, and breezes waft away some of the smog, affording a better view to the north of the snow-capped Alborz Mountains, the capital's only scenic attribute.

How long Iran's so-called revolutionary spring will last is debatable.

For a fair number of Iranians one encounters it is already not without disappointments.

"Nothing has happened to make me wish the movement had not taken place or make me want to go bck to the old days of SAVAK," the Shah's secret police, a 50-year-old professor said.

"I only hope the present and future government will let people be free to think and say what they like. Right now there are signs that give you hope and signs that make you fear."

He said that when he walks down the street, Islamic fanatics occasionally shout at him to cut his drooping moustache. (According to Islamic teachings, the hair of a moustache should not hang over the lip.)

In his classroom, he said, some radical students accuse him of having "co-operated" with the old government by having taught under it. He is worried that good professors may be forced out of their jobs, or worse, because of things they said when they had to be constantly wary of SAVAK informers in their classrooms.

He says he voted for an Islamic republic in last month's referendum "to end the old system," although he admits he has "no clear ideas" what an Islamic republic is. He says he would rather have had a wider choice than the one between the monarchy and the Islamic republic.

In an interview before the revolution he didn't want to be named. He still doesn't, and he suspects that Khomeini's committee is tapping telephones just as SAVAK used to.

A female bank worker has no such reservations about an Islamic republic, although she abhors the chador, or full-length veil, traditionally worn by devout Moslem women here.

She claims that Khomeini's controversial statements about hejab, which can be translated as wearing the veil or modesty, and which caused a series of angry women's marches, were exaggerated and misunderstood.

"Hejab is within you," she says. Though not religious herself, she asserts that "Islam is the only thing that could have united the people against the shah."

An Iranian journalist, also a woman, shares her compatriot's indifference to the chador and religion but is much less tolerant of the new Islamic government. Faced with only a choice between that and a monarchy, she voted in the referendum for the Islamic republic.

"What else?" she asks.

She would have boycotted the referendum entirely, except that a seal of participation was stamped on identity papers, and she was afraid she might not be permitted to leave the country in the future if she could not produce it.

Here are some other items on life in the Islamic republic:

— The government is sending a delegation to Australia and New Zealand shortly to verify their methods of slaughtering cattle and sheep. The issue arose when Khomeini banned frozen meat imported from the two countries as "forbidden" because it was not slaughtered according to Islamic practice.

The meat should be thoroughly bled before freezing. The Iranian Meat Organization released frozen meat stocks after seeing films of the slaughtering process presented by Australian and New Zealand representatives. A meat organization official then said Khomeini only "thought" the meat was forbidden. Anyway the delegation is to include two meat organization officials, two butchers and two Moslem leaders.

— Another hot topic these day is seegheh, the Iranian practice of temporary marriage. Introduced during the times when merchants went off for months or even years on trade caravans across continent, the practice allowed men to contract for feminine companionship for a certain length of time while leaving their wives and children at home.

The man would choose a suitable companion — usually a nubile young village girl — and make a deal with her usually destitute father with the approval of a local religious leader. At the end of the agreed time a divorce would be declared, and the erstwhile husband would pay off.

This Shiite Moslem practice suited the man and the girl's father, who stood to make some needed cash. In essence a rather complicated form of prolonged prostitution, seegheh marriages still exist, although they are rare.

The question now is whether the practice can continue under the Islamic republic. The verdict so far, according to the government spokesman: "It is correct that men can obtain it." He added that religious leaders would have to study the separate issue of polygamy, banned under the shah but permitted by Islam.

— The brevity of bikinis on Iran's Caspian Sea beaches once rivalled Europe. And no one seemed to mind when more traditional women waded into the water fully clothed, sometimes even wearing their chadors.

Now, however, the militay commander of Bandar Anzali has announced that in accordance with Islamic practices, there will henceforth be separate bathing facilities for men and women.

The good news is that this is an improvement as women previously were not allowed to bathe publicly in that town at all. The bad news is that the arrangement is expected to spread to other towns that previously were more liberal.

As far as is known, the Islamic status of bikinis hasn't been tested, but the prospects for Iranian girl watchers this summer look grim.

— Some enterprising revolutionaries have found a new way to vent public hatred for the shah and the American government which supported him for so long. Sidewalk shooting galleries have sprung up, allowing the vengeful to pepper pictures of the shah and President Carter with pellet guns. It is hard to tell which one is the more frequent target.

Some of double-dummy problems are so hard to solve that even the most ardent problem-solvers sometimes give up in despair. Perhaps this problem is not that difficult, but the solution is unique.

South is declarer at five diamonds, sees all four hands, and must make eleven tricks after West's opening lead of the queen of spades. How does he perform the feat?

Declarer wins the spade queen in dummy with the king and cashes the ace of spades, discarding his ace of clubs! This extraordinary discard paves the way for declarer to ruff five of dummy's losers in his hand and thus make the contract.

At trick three, declarer ruffs the ten of spades, then plays a club to dummy's king and ruffs a club. Declarer next leads a trump to dummy's king, catching West's queen, and ruffs another club. South now plays a heart towards dummy and, when West produces the king, lets him win it! This is now the position:

North

West
♠ J 9 8
♣ Q 10

East
♡ Q J
◇ 10 8 4

South
♡ 8 7 4
◇ A 9

West's return doesn't matter, so let's say he leads a club. South ruffs with the nine, plays a heart to the ace and ruffs dummy's last club with his last trump, the ace. This is declarer's tenth trick, and he still has the jack of trumps in dummy to cinch the contract.

Declarer's eleven tricks consist of the A-K of spades, ace of hearts, king of clubs and seven trump tricks! The seven trump tricks consist of the king of trumps, the five ruffs in his hand that he scores with the A-9-7-6-5 of trumps and, finally, the jack of trumps. However, all these plays must be preceded by the sensational discard of the ace of clubs on the ace of spades.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

For Saturday, May 26
By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (Mar. 21 - Apr. 19): Accent on "release from restrictions." You locate key areas, you know what to do about security, red tape, getting others to do their share. Aquarius, Scorpio, Taurus natives play interesting roles. You'll see!

TAURUS (Apr. 20 - May 20): Money, locating what had been lost, missing or stolen — this is spotlighted. You get call or message which could be cause for celebration. Be ready for policy delineation, articulation of feelings by "special person."

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): One who appeared to be a foe can become a valuable ally. Take initiative, be confident, direct and make personal appearances. Wear bright colors, be conspicuous by your presence. Aquarian plays special role.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): You are introduced to "arcane knowledge." You observe rituals and could become familiar with study of comparative religion. Accent on institutions, special organizations and hospitals. Number 7 could be present often enough to defy coincidence.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Emphasis on friends, hopes, wishes, desires and fulfillment of aspirations. Bring priorities into sharp, clear focus. Have frank discussion with one whose life has become intertwined with your own.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Views are vindicated — you perceive pulse of public. Aries Libra individuals figure prominently. What you have been seeking is closer than might be anticipated. Assignment is completed — you prove a major point.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Stress greater independence of thought, action. Welcome contacts, challenges and chance to put original ideas to work. Leo, Aquarius person figure prominently. Plan ahead for publishing, travel and educational pursuits.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): You can regain sense of direction. Key is to be yourself, not an imitation of someone else or a robot. Message should become startlingly clear. Cancer, Leo, Aquarius individuals figure in scenario.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Means experiment, test, make inquiries and pursue course that results in answers, sans superficial cover-ups. You receive news concerning legal matters.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Be specific, thorough, willing to double check sources. Build on solid structure; reject substitutes, schemes and so-called bargains. Aquarius, Scorpio individuals figure prominently. In matters of speculation, stick to number 4.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Relationships are intensified. More people are interested in what you say and do. Excitement of discovery is on agenda. Write, communicate, imprint style and let member of opposite sex know exactly where you stand.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - Mar. 20): Emphasis on basic security, home, family relationships. For now, take conservative course. Refuse to be intimidated by those who shout, cajole, chide or threaten. You'll get support from responsible quarters.

IF MAY 26 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have a sense of humor but are serious about objectives. You know instinctively when to put aside fun-and-games. Contacts made last year are beginning to bear fruit. A burden has been lifted — you are more free to express and travel than you have been in past four years. You seldom do things halfway; with you it is all or nothing.

FUN WITH FIGURES

By J.A.H. HUNTER

Steve pointed to the plans laid out on the table. "Our new home," he said. "I signed up yesterday."

Harry looked. "Quite a house," he commented. "And I see you'll have lots of land."

"That's what we wanted," Steve replied. "It's a rectangular lot, sides whole numbers of metres. And the area is just five less than seven times its perimeter, in metres and square metres."

What were the dimensions?

(Answer Monday)

Yesterday's answer: TRICKS was 347082 (least risk, 5428).

A scent's a scent for a' that

GARDENING

hilda beastall

Gardeners in general, even those of Victoria, seldom think of scent or fragrance in connection with rhododendrons or the allied group we call azaleas.

Some say these fine plants which grow so well in our gardens would be more used if they had perfume to match the glowing colors of the really spectacular flowers.

Scent is not always a fragrance nor what we specify as being a perfume, for those words are commonly used to describe an entirely pleasing and usually sweet scent.

We like to breathe the scent of newly turned fertile soil; of our coastal evergreen forests in summer's warmth; of a coastal ocean beach on any day of the year. Unless we give way to unwarranted poetic influence, the smell of these natural scents is best described by that word "scent." Something pungent, acrid and sharp to the nostrils is included in an attempted analysis, so we leave it at that.

At least one fairly commonly grown rhododendron earns the right to either fragrance or perfume, yet I think a tinge of "scent" should enter the description.

The hardy Rhododendron luteum (called also Azalea pontica) has fragrance aplenty. You smell it 50 feet away, the sweet perfume of fresh honey on the air during May.

If you don't already know this shrub, the search is on until your nose leads to the source. There it is, a three- to five-foot shrub covered with rich yellow flowers, giving off the wonderful fresh sweet perfume of honey.

The leaves begin to develop as the flowers fade which they are doing now. All seed capsules should be cut off, especially from a small shrub so that foliage will grow during summer for coloring in fall.

Flower buds for next year's display are seen on rhodos and azaleas in fall, becoming larger throughout winter.

Rhododendron viscosum is less spectacular in bloom, but the perfume is said to be like that of honeysuckle. In fact, the common name of this plant since it was first discovered is still Swamp Honeysuckle. The flowers are described as being white narrow tubes, accompanied by bluish grey leaves. Flowering here after Rhodo luteum is finished, R. viscosum adds continuity to the fragrance theme. This one I have not experienced.

What I think of definitely as a scent as it has no sweetness, comes from the leaves of the mollis azaleas, or Rhododendron molle, and the hybrids developed from it.

The flowers are normally out before the leaves, giving vivid displays if several colors are grown. The range of shades is interesting if seeds are sown or plants are chose while in bloom. They may be various shades of orange, delicate apricot and peach, lovely white with maybe a hint of pink — all scentless. It is as leaves unfold that the acrid scent is noticed.

This scent has been described as foxy by those who have known foxes. To me it is not disagreeable. The scent is not persistent in cooler weather, but becomes stronger as temperatures climb — especially if the azaleas are in a sheltered sunny corner of the garden.

Perhaps the lesson is to plant those with scented (foxy) leaves in an open section where air currents move, and those with perfumed flowers or foliage in more sheltered spots where sun warmth will spread their fragrance for our pleasure.

HONORED at the Victoria General Hospital's annual Long Service Dinner Thursday evening were Leslie Spencer, left, who has chalked up 25 years of service and Mrs. Tilly Parton, retired after 17 years with the hospital. At right is Michael O'Brien, the hospital's director of employee relations.

All-seasons boundary splits salt and pepper

By ANDREW MALCOLM

EDMUNDSTON, New Brunswick (NYT) — Cecille Bechard is a Canadian who visits the United States several dozen times a day — when she goes to the refrigerator or the back door or to make tea, for instance.

To read and sleep she stays in Canada, and she eats here, too, if she sits at the north end of the kitchen table.

Bechard's home here in the eastern part of Canada sits on the United States-Canadian border. The 3,986.8-mile frontier, drawn in 1842, cuts through the kitchen wall and across the sink, splits the salt and pepper shakers, just misses the stove and passes thrugh the other wall to sever the Nadeau family's clothesline and cut off the candy counter in Alfred Sirois's general store.

Almost anywhere else in the world Bechard might need a passport to take a bath. The long Canadian-American border is different, for it seems to unite rather than divide.

The unusual situation has created a special culture — almost a narrow third country where nationality matters less than personality, where the currency of each country is acceptable in the other and where bilingual, binational families are so common that a visitor needs a scorecard to keep it all straight.

"Somehow," an American diplomat commented, "when it comes to Canadian-American dealings, the basic assumption is always that something amicable will be worked out."

Bechard, like many around here a French-Canadian, pays property taxes on half her house to Canada and half to Maine. In B.C., Vancouver residents anxious to flee the city have bought weekend homes in the country — in Washington State.

Virgil Lane, a Montana mailman, delivers letters to isolated rural Canadians because his route is closest. Some Ontario residents go to Buffalo to see hockey games because they are closer than those in Toronto. Nineteen-year-olds in Maine drink in New Brunswick or Quebec.

Such thorough international interchange can obscure the reality: Canada and the United States are two quite different countries with widely diverse governments, politics, traditions, holidays, problems, culture, economies, viewpoints and, here in New Brunswick, even time zones. Canadian post offices routinely put up signs advising that American stamps are not valid in Canada, and American vending machines reject Canadian coins.

Nonetheless, for a few miles on each side of the border a unique culture exists. "Around here," said Ben Talbot, an American who visits Canada for golf and Chinese food, "the border is almost invisible." The melding starts with the families.

"Well," said Marcella Carrier, a Canadian who married an American and has an American son and daughter and a Canadian son, "my father was American and my mother Canadian. Most of Dad's brothers and sisters were American, but some were born in Canada, the younger ones, because my grandfather, who was American, moved to Canada to work once; but my father moved back and I met a local American fellow and married him."

Finally, Carrier became an American anyway because she thought it would help her American son become a Maine state trooper. (He failed the eye examination.)

Even corporate nationalities tend to get lost here. Fraser, Inc., a Canadian paper company, makes pulp from wood on the Canadian side and pumps it through pipes across the Saint John River Bridge under the customs booths to Fraser Paper, Ltd., a United States subsidiary in Madawaska, Maine, where paper is made.

Because there is no customs duty on pulp slop, this saves the company money, although some of the paper is sent back to Canada — and taxed accordingly.

The process also has the effect of spreading the 2,000 jobs around and of linking the two communities' economies because there are Canadians working in the American plants and Americans working in the Canadian plants, with some taking part of their pay in Canadian dollars and part in American dollars.

Naturally, the financial implications are considerable. To attract Canadian customers, many American stores like Roberts Jewelry, Noella's Dresses and sometimes even the K Mart in Madawaska accept Canadian money at the same value as American even though the Canadian dollar is currently worth 87 American cents. This has prompted Americans to go to Canada, buy Canadian money — they get $1.13 or so for each dollar — and return home to spend it for the bargain goods offered to Canadians.

All the foreign purchases are supposed to be declared to customs so duty can be paid. "But you know how it is," a Canadian said with a straight face. "People forget."

Of course, there are disadvantages to life here in Borderville, North America. As Roland Marquis, a Canadian who lives and works in Maine, is not an American, he cannot vote there; since he is living outside Canada, he cannot vote here either. On the other hand, when he retires he will get pensions from both countries.

When businessmen must make trips from this Canadian community to say, Montreal, a distance of 390 miles, the best way is an 800-mile journey by plane via Boston.

"But you know," said Larry Fyfe, who married a Canadian even though he is Canadian, too, "after you live along the border for a while, this kind of weird business seems perfectly normal."

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Hydro had a $49-million profit for the fiscal year ended March 31, chairman Robert Bonner said Thursday.

The profit was a $22-million gain over the previous year and included writing off losses of $61 million on the Crown corporation's transportation operations.

Bonner said in a news release that record sales volumes and peak demands for both electricity and gas were recorded in B.C. during 1978-79. Gross revenues for the year totalled $904 million, an increase of 13 per cent or $102 million over the previous year.

Export sales of surplus electricity were $34 million, a decline from $78 million from the previous year, which Bonner said reflected lower total storage levels behind B.C. power dams.

Costs increased by $81 million to $855 million for the year. Highest rates of increase were 26 per cent in the cost of natural gas purchased for resale to the public and 24 per cent for grants, school taxes and water rentals paid to governments.

Long-term borrowings during the year reached $477 million in Canadian funds.

B.C.'s road deaths soaring

MASSED MASTS fill Inner Harbor on eve of annual Swiftsure classic. Visitor Louise Powell from Norfolk, Va., dropped by to snap the yachts and was in turn, snapped by the Times' Bill Halkett. Big race gets underway tomorrow morning with first boats expected back some time Sunday afternoon.

Speed limit 'frustration'

By PAUL NICHOLSON
Times Staff

The general decline in automobile-related injuries and deaths that followed implementation of B.C.'s mandatory seatbelt legislation 18 months ago has undergone a dramatic reversal.

In the first quarter of 1979, virtually every category of motor vehicle accident monitored by the government has increased by double-figure percentages over the same period the year before.

Highway fatalities are up 20 per cent, while the number of injured has climbed 29 per cent.

The number of accidents is up 14 per cent and the number of vehicles involved has increased 12 per cent over the first quarter of 1978.

Motor Vehicles Superintendent R.G. Whitlock said today one reason for the increases is the fact that B.C. had a good year in 1978, so the percentage figures this year look bad in comparison.

"But I also believe an increase in the speed on the highways has led to more accidents and more severe injuries, especially with more smaller cars on the highways," Whitlock said.

Many motorists are frustrated with the basic 80 km/h speed limit throughout the province and habitually exceed it, he said.

This creates a dangerous situation on the highways where drivers obeying the limit are being passed by those constantly exceeding the limit.

And there is a tendency for drivers who are regularly being passed to speed up themselves.

When a driver is going faster than he intended, it decreases his chances of avoiding or pulling out of a potential accident, he said.

The increasing number of accidents and injuries is a trend all across North America, Whitlock said.

Gold price tops $270

Times News Services

Gold prices soared to record levels today, topping $270 an ounce ($310.50 Canadian) on the bullion markets in London and Zurich.

Bullion prices in London rocketed to $270.15 U.S. an ounce, up from Thursday's closing price of $265.000 and shattering the previous record of $265.625 set Tuesday. London gold brokers fixed the morning price at $270.00 an ounce, a record for any fixing.

The widely forecast $300-an-ounce (U.S.) price of gold, predicted for the end of this year, now appears increasingly realistic.

Investors traditionally buy gold as a hedge in times of economic unrest.

Meanwhile, sparked by the sharpest gasoline price hike since the Arab oil embargo, Americans got another inflationary jolt when the consumer price index jumped 1.1 per cent in April, the U.S. government reported today.

The overall ise surpassed March's 1 per cent increase and was just slightly below February's 1.2 per cent gain. During the first four months of the year, consumer prices rose at a annual rate of 13.2 per cent.

They have jumped 14.4 per cent during the first four months of 1979.

Free Quebec: 500,000 jobs lost

By PETER HADEKEL
Times Quebec Bureau

QUEBEC — A Quebec government study released Thursday admits more than 500,000 jobs would be lost in an independent Quebec if commercial relations with the rest of Canada were broken off.

The study states what most Parti Quebecois politicians have been unwilling to admit: Quebec is far more dependent on the rest of Canada for export markets and jobs than Canada is on Quebec.

In the case of an economic rupture between Quebec and Canada, unemployment in Quebec would almost triple, says the study tabled by intergovernmental Affairs Minister Claude Morin.

It is the last in a series of reports on federalism commissioned by Morin to prepare the PQ government for its referendum campaign on sovereignty association.

The study says Quebec's weak, tariff-protected manufacturing industries like furniture, textiles, clothing and shoes would suffer more from commercial rupture than would Ontario's industries. It adds that Quebec sends 30 per cent of its exports to Ontario while Ontario sends only 10 per cent of its exports to Quebec.

In the event of a trade rupture, commercial activity in Quebec would drop by 48 per cent in Quebec compared to 24 per cent in Ontario and 6.2 per cent in the other provinces.

The furniture industry in Quebec would shrink by 57 per cent, compared to 21.8 per cent in Ontario and 10.5 per cent in the rest of Canada.

Total employment in Quebec would drop 28.4 per cent (about 500,000 jobs) while the job loss in Ontario would be 15 per cent or about 400,000 jobs.

The scenario assumes that Quebec and Canada both adopt protective tariffs for their own industries.

But if Quebec and Canada were to work out a limited free trade agreement under which Quebec exports like clothing, paper, primary metals and shoes could enter Canada duty free, while rubbers, pastics, heavy equipment and machine parts from Canada would have free entry into Quebec, Canada would be a loser in the deal, the study says.

Such a form of economic association would provide Quebec with about $1.2 billion in economic advantages while the estimated benefit for the other provinces would be $566 million. In any eventual negociations between a overeign Quebec and Canada, the choice of sectors to becovered in a free trade agreement will be "very important", says the study.

Charlottes' MDs resign

QUEEN CHARLOTTE CITY (CP) — Five doctors employed by the B.C. government to work on the Queen Charlotte Islands have tendered their resignations, effective July 1, after claiming they have not been paid for overtime work.

Under new government policies introduced this year, doctors hired by the health and human resources ministries to work in isolated areas are paid a straight salary.

They are expected to bargain for overtime through the B.C. Medical Association but the doctors here say they are not satisfied with the results.

Residents of the islands complained to Health Minister Bob McClelland who said the doctors will get their overtime pay, pending the outcome of negotiations with the association. However, the disgruntled doctors said this is no guarantee.

Three of the doctors are based here, while the other two work out of Masset. There are only two other doctors on the islands, and both work at the Canadian Forces base at Masset.

Diane MacKenzie, spokesman for the health and human resources ministries, said the doctors are caught in a difficult situation.

She said if the government policies are not changed, the area might wind up with no doctors or doctors with little experience.

Florida executes murderer

RAIFORD, Fla. — Convicted killer John Spenkelink was put to death today in Florida's electric chair, the first person to be executed in the United States since Gary Gilmore went before a firing squad in Utah in 1977.

Spenkelink lost his last hope of reprieve four minutes before the scheduled execution when the Supreme Court voted 6 to 2 to deny a stay.

The execution lasted about two minutes.

Huge Raiford State Prison fell silent when the switch was thrown, but across from the prison in a cow pasture about 100 demonstrators shrieked themselves into a frenzy.

5 days to safety after plane crash

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — Two Canadians, exhausted but suffering only minor injuries after a light airplane crash three weeks ago, trudged to safety Thursday night after wandering for five days in the rugged Central Idaho mountains, Custer County authorities said.

Brent Dyer and Donna Johnson, both of Estevan, Sask., told deputies they stayed with their plane 15 days before they went for help.

Pilot Norm Pischke, apparently set out for help earlier and was still missing.

Custer County Deputy Sheriff Sandra James said the wreckage of the plane was spotted by a National Guard helicopter this morning. An evacuation team was being taken to the site by helicopter.

The survivors said Ms. Johnson's father, Donald Johnson, was mortally injured in the crash and died several days after, Sheriff Sid Teuscher said. He said the body was still at the wreckage.

The Canadians stumbled to safety at the abandoned Livingston mine, 73 kilometres southwest of Challis, Idaho, and were met by mine employee Elmer Swanson, who notified authorities.

They were taken to the North Custer Medical Clinic in Challis where they were treated by Dr. Richard Maxwell and released.

The sheriff said Dyer and Ms. Johnson suffered minor cuts and bruises and the woman's toes had been frostbitten. Both were suffering from starvation.

The survivors told authorities they stayed with the downed plane for about 15 days before deciding to walk out. He said they burned gasoline from the Cessna 172 Skyhawk in an effort to ward off cold temperatures and snow, which had almost covered the aircraft.

Last weekend, the two survivors apparently decided no one was going to come looking for them and decided to try to make it out of the backcountry.

"They figured no one was going to spot them, so they walked out," the sheriff said. "All they know is they walked around for five days and we don't know if they were walking in circle or what. So we don't know where the plane is. I sent a plane up tonight, but it was dark before we could do anything."

Details of the crash were sketchy, but Dyer and Ms. Johnson told the sheriff that clouds from a spring snow storm hampered visibility forcing Pischke to set the plane down.

"From what we could tell, they couldn't get over the mountains, so the pilot apparently tried to get out of the storm by traveling low in the canyons," Teuscher said. "The plane's wing caught a tree, and then it crashed."

By eating moss after they ran out of a few snacks, such as peanuts and candy, they were able to stay alive and in reasonably good condition, Teuscher said.

The two seemed to be in good spirits, the sheriff said, and were excited about calling their families in Saskatchewan.

"They were happy to be back with people," Teuscher said. "Dyer mentioned several times he wanted a hot fudge sundae, and they were enjoying coffee.

"They had some sunflower seeds and a few other things to eat. But Dyer said they ate anything they could find. He said they were eating moss out of the bottom of streams."

Who's who on Tory 'hit list'

Times News Services

OTTAWA — A pessimistic crew of about 150 aides to Liberal cabinet ministers are today scrambling for jobs.

The pickings are made even slimmer by recent cutbacks in the public service and the new Clark government's avowed plan to eliminate another 60,000 jobs through attrition over three years.

Even those who qualify for special preference for public service jobs, by virtue of serving three consecutive years on a minister's exempt staff, are uncertain whether they will get jobs.

The rumor is that they are on one of three priority lists, with the top-ranking list the one carrying names of public servants made redundant by recent public service cutbacks.

And because of high turnover among executive assistants and special assistants to ministers, many don't even qualify to be placed on a list.

Because the ministerial aides work as politically exempt staff, not public service employees, their jobs can be as uncertain as the tenure of the particular cabinet minister for whom they work.

A few may be accepted into Conservative ranks, however, as the incoming minority government seeks ministerial aides for a cabinet that conceivably could have a lifespan of no more than six months or a year.

"Nobody I know has been through a government change," said one source. "We don't know exactly what to expect."

The last change was in 1963 when Lester Pearson's Liberals replaced John Diefenbaker's Conservatives.

It would, though, be ludicrous for incoming prime minister Joe Clark to fire deputy ministers and heads of government agencies right now, according to political scientist George Szablowski who has spent more than two years studying the most powerful mandarins in the federal government.

"These are the people on whom the new government must depend more than anyone else for an orderly transition," Szablowski said.

"If anybody is suggesting that heads will roll before he (Clark) meets Parliament in September or October, I just don't buy it," Szablowski said.

Published reports, seemingly based more on fear than fact, however, keep claiming the Conservatives have a so-called "hit list" of

B.C.'s road deaths soaring

By PAUL NICHOLSON
Times Staff

The general decline in automobile-related injuries and deaths that followed implementation of B.C.'s mandatory seatbelt legislation 18 months ago has undergone a dramatic reversal.

In the first quarter of 1979, virtually every category of motor vehicle accident monitored by the government has increased by double-figure percentages over the same period the year before.

Highway fatalities are up 20 per cent, while the number of injured has climbed 29 per cent.

The number of accidents is up 14 per cent and the number of vehicles involved has increased 12 per cent over the first quarter of 1978.

Motor Vehicles Superintendent R.G. Whitlock said today one reason for the increases is the fact that B.C. had a good year in 1978, so the percentage figures this year look bad in comparison.

"But I also believe an increase in the speed on the highways has led to more accidents and more severe injuries, especially with more smaller cars on the highways," Whitlock said.

Many motorists are frustrated with the basic 80 km/h speed limit throughout the province and habitually exceed it, he said.

This creates a dangerous situation on the highways where drivers obeying the limit are being passed by those constantly exceeding the limit.

And there is a tendency for drivers who are regularly being passed to speed up themselves.

When a driver is going faster than he intended, it decreases his chances of avoiding or pulling out of a potential accident, he said.

The increasing number of accidents and injuries is a trend all across North America, Whitlock said.

Toronto

TORONTO (CP) — The Toronto stock market rose sharply in active mid-afternoon trading today.

Among industrials, Aquitaine of Canada gained 1¾ to $32¾, Alberta Natural Gas 1⅜ to $55⅛, Bow Valley Industries 1¼ to $28½, Teledyne Canada 1⅛ to $13 and Texaco Canada 1 to $64.

La Verendrye Management lost 1 to $8.

New York

NEW YORK (AP) — Despite news that consumer prices had risen at a 13.2 per cent annual rate in April, stock prices were mixed today. Analysts had expected the rise in consumer prices, and said the market took it calmly as a result.

Just before the market opened, the labor department announced that consumer prices had risen 1.1 per cent in April, or 13.2 per cent on an annual basis. That compared with a one per cent jump in March and a 1.2 percent increase in February.

The rise in consumer prices was fed by a six per cent increase in gasoline prices in April, the biggest leap in gas prices since a 7.3 per cent increase in March 1974 during the Arab oil embargo. Gas prices have risen 49.6 per cent since the beginning of the year, the labor department said

Ashland Petroleum headed the active list, off ⅝ to $42⅜ with several large blocks changing hands. Ashland has been rumored to be considering an offer for NLT Corp., which was also active and up 1⅜ to $29⅝.

Montreal

MONTREAL (CP) — Prices edged up fractionally in moderate trading on the Montreal Stock Exchange today. Brascan A was up ⅜ at $24½, CP Ltd. ⅛ at $30¾, Interprovincial PipeLine A ⅜ at $19½, Norcen Energy Resources ½ at $21, Reed Stenhouse ¼ at $9½, and TransCanada PipeLines ¼ at $21½. Bank of Montreal was down ⅛ at $23, Bell Canada ⅛ at $22⅛, Imasco ¼ at $41½, Southam Press ⅝ at $26, and Union Gas A ⅛ at $10⅜.

London

LONDON (Reuter) — Disappointing company results and a rise in domestic oil prices sent the London stock market sharply lower near the close of trading today. The Financial Times index was down 7.4 to 504.2. Industrials, oils and banks were weak but mining shares firmed. Canadian shares eased.

VANCOUVER

VANCOUVER (CP) — Prices were up in moderately active trading today on the Vancouver Stock Exchange. Volume to 11 a.m. PDT was 1,791,106 shares.

In the industrials, Daon Development was unchanged at $11 3-4 on 9,800 shares and Kaiser Resources was up 1-4 at $19 7-8 on 4,000. Canadian Javelin was unchanged at $1.55 on 2,000 shares and Hal Roach Studios was up .20 at $3.70 on 2,000. Ardiem Industries was unchanged at .22 and Grouse Mountain was down .02 at .72.

Fuel delays SST

SEATTLE (AP) — Fuel availability will determine when the supersonic transport airplane is developed in the United States, but a domestic SST eventually will be built, says a Boeing Co. official.

William Hamilton, vice-president for research and development, told an aerospace conference that the SST uses more fuel per-passenger-mile than any other aircraft and there will have to be an adequate energy supply plan before it can be built in the U.S.

Bernard Darieux, special assistant to the president of France's aerospace firm, said the market for the SST will be very small before 1990.

He said noise and fuel consumption are the SST's main problems. France and Great Britain jointly developed the supersonic Concorde aircraft.

Drink danger with Tylenol

NEW YORK (AP) — An overdose of a widely-used aspirin substitute may be more dangerous than has been suspected if taken with alcohol, a researcher said Thursday.

The warning comes from Dr. Craig McClain of Minneapolis Veterans Hospital and the University of Minnesota Medical Centre.

McClain and two colleagues reported to a meeting of the American Gastroenterological Association in New Orleans on the popular non-aspirin pain reliever acetaminophen.

Acetaminophen is used in dozens of over-the-counter drugs and is the active ingredient in Tylenol and Datril.

The medical director of McNeil Consumer Products Co. of Fort Washington, Pa., maker of Tylenol, said there was no evidence acetaminophen was toxic in recommended doses.

Dr. Thomas Gates, the medical director, said most cases of acetaminophen poisoning were suicide attempts with large doses.

"Somebody who has a cocktail at night and uses alcohol properly need not worry about interaction between the two drugs," said Dr. Ben Lanman, medical director of Bristol-Myers, maker of Datril.

$869.00

We asked our audio experts what they might dream up if they had a maximum of $900.00 to play with. They started with a SANSUI AU-117 integrated amplifier. It features Sansui's advanced engineering, tight deep bass, and outside, a distinctive rack-mounting professional format design. They matched the AU-117 with SANSUI'S companion TU-217 tuner. Same Sansui quality, with high sensitivity and excellent separation. Then they added the popular SANSUI SR-222 MK. II turntable, with two speeds, belt-drive, manual control and cueing and finished in gloss black. Finally they chose the PRO-LINEAR STAGE 50 2 way speaker system available in black to match the system. Not completely satisfied they also included the beautiful GX-50 rack to display the system. A professionally balanced system at a once-in-a-lifetime price.

SANSUI G-3500, a Pure Power AM/FM stereo receiver with 26 watts RMS per channel and less than 0.1% THD. Features mic mixing, loudness switch and much more. The SANSUI SR-B200SE is a precision two speed belt drive turntable to baby your records, couple this with the PRO-LINEAR STAGE 50 II acoustic suspension two way speaker system and your ready for good listening.

$499.00

SANSUI's SC-3110 is a professional quality cassette deck with all the features you will need to produce high quality recordings. The specifications of Sansui tape decks exceed those of FM broadcasting to ensure you get all the music.

The SANSUI AU 217 is a low-distortion integrated stereo amplifier, rated at 30 watts per channel RMS, the AU 217 produces clean high fidelity reproduction up to full volume setting. (THD 0.06%) try this with any other amplifier in this power range.

SANSUI's G-8000, a high power and very clean AM/FM stereo receiver, produces 120 watts/ch., min. RMS with no more than 0.025% THD, and has a frequency response from DC to 200,000Hz. The SANSUI SPX 8000 speakers are designed to handle the dynamic range of this receiver. They are a 4 way, 6 speaker system capable of 160 watts input. We've coupled this system with the SANSUI SR 535 Direct Drive Fully Automatic Turntable for clean, reliable performance.
